(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"So much the better," Ray declared, grimly. "Now, my young friend, I have given you all the time I can spare. Beyond what I have said I shall say nothing. If you had known me better—you would not be here still."

So I left him. His words gave me no loophole of hope. His silence was the silence of a strong man, and I had no weapons with which to assail it. I had wasted the money which I could ill afford on the journey to London. Certainly Ray's advice was good. The sooner I was back in Brasier the better.

From the station I had walked straight to Ray's house, and from Ray's it ousel returned, without any deviation, direct to the great terminus. For a man with less than fifty pounds in the world London is scarcely a hospitable city. I caught a slow train, and after four hours of jolting, cold, and the usual third-class miseries, alighted at Rowchester station. Already I had started on the three-mile tramp home, my coat collar turned up as some slight protection against the drizzling rain, when a two-wheeled trap overtook me, and Mr. Moyat shouted out a gruff greeting. He raised the water-proof apron, and I clambered in by his side.

"Been to Sunbridge?" he inquired cheerfully.

"I have been to London," I answered.

"You haven't been long about it," he remarked. "I saw you on the eight-twenty, didn't I?"

I nodded.

"My business was soon over," I said.

"I've been to Sunbridge," he told me. "Went over with his Grace. My girl was talking about you the other night, Mr. Ducaine."

I started.

"Indeed?" I answered.

"Seemed to think," he continued, "that things had been growing a bit rough for you, losing those pupils after you'd been at the expense of taking the Grange, and all that, you know."

"It was really bad luck," I admitted quietly.

"I've been pondering," he continued, with some diffidence, "whether you'd care for a bit of work in my office, just to carry you along till things looked up. Blanche, she was set upon it that I should ask you anyway. Of course, you being a college young gentleman might not care about it, but there's times when any sort of a job is better than none, eh?"

"It is very kind of you, Mr. Moyat," I answered, "and very kind of Miss Blanche to have thought of it. A week ago I shouldn't have hesitated. But within the last few days I have had a sort of offer—I don't know whether it will come to anything, but it may. Might I leave it open for the present?"

I think that Mr. Moyat was a little disappointed. He flicked the cob with the whip, and looked straight ahead into the driving mist.

"Just as you say," he declared. "I ain't particular in want of any one, but I'm getting to find my own book keeping a bit hard, especially now that my eyes ain't what they were. Of course it would only be a thirty bob a week job, but I suppose you'd live on that all right, unless you were thinking of getting married, eh?"

I laughed derisively.

"Married, Mr. Moyat!" I exclaimed. "Why, I'm next door to a pauper."

"There's such a thing," he remarked thoughtfully, "if one's a steady sort of chap, and means work, as picking up a girl with a bit of brass now and then."

"I can assure you, Mr. Moyat," I said as coolly as possible, "that anything of that sort is out of the question so far as I am concerned. I should never dream of even thinking of getting married till I had a home of my own and an income."

He seemed about to say something, but checked himself. We drove on in silence till we came to a dark pile of buildings standing in a little way back from the road. He moved his head towards it.

"They tell me Brasier Grange is took after all," he remarked. "Mr. Hulshaw told me so this morning."

I was very little interested, but was prepared to welcome any change in the conversation.

"Do you know who is coming there?" I asked.

"An American lady, I believe, name of Lessing. I don't know what strangers want coming to such a place, I'm sure."

I glanced involuntarily over my shoulder. Brasier Grange was a long grim pile of buildings, which had been unoccupied for many years. Between it and the sea was nothing but empty marshland. It was one of the bleakest spots along the coast—to the casual observer nothing but an arid waste of sands in the summer, a wilderness of desolation in the winter. Only those who have dwelt in those parts are able to feel the fascination of that great empty land, a fascination potent enough, but of slow growth. Mr. Moyat's remark was justified.

We drove into his stable yard and clambered down.

"You'll come in and have a bit of supper," Mr. Moyat insisted.

I hesitated. I felt that it would be wiser to refuse, but I was cold and wet, and the thought of my fireless room depressed me. So I was ushered into the long, low dining-room, with its old hunting prints and black oak furniture, and, best of all, with its huge log fire. Mrs. Moyat greeted me with her usual negative courtesy. I do not think that I was a favourite of hers, but whatever her welcome lacked in impressiveness, Blanche's made up for. She kept looking at me as though anxious that I should remember our common secret. More than once I was almost sorry that I had not let her speak.

"You've had swell callers again," she remarked, as we sat side by side at supper-time. "A carriage from Rowchester was outside your door when I passed."

"Ah, he's a good sort is the Duke," Mr. Moyat declared appreciatively. "A clever chap, too. He's AI in politics, and a first-class business man, chairman of the great Southern Railway Company, and on the board of several other City companies."

"I can't see what the gentry want to meddle with such things at all for" Mrs. Moyat said. "There's some as says as the Duke's lost more than he can afford by speculations."

"The Duke's a shrewd man," Mr. Moyat declared. "It's easy to talk."

"If he hasn't lost money," Mrs. Moyat demanded, "why is Rowchester Castle let to that American millionaire? Why doesn't he live there himself?"

"Prefers the East Coast," Mr. Moyat declared cheerfully. "More bracing, and suits his constitution better. I've heard him say so himself."

"That is all very well," Mrs. Moyat said, "but I can't see that Rowchester is a fit country house for a nobleman. What do you think Mr. Ducaine?"

I was more interested in the discussion than anxious to be drawn into it, so I returned an evasive reply. Mrs. Moyat nodded sympathetically.

"Of course," she said, "you haven't seen the house, except from the road, but I've been over it many a time when Mrs. Felton was housekeeper and the Duke didn't come down so often, and I say that it's a poor place for a Duke."

"Well, well, mother, we won't quarrel about it," Mr. Moyat declared, rising from the table. "I must just have a look at the mare. Do you look after Mr. Ducaine, Blanche."

To my annoyance the retreat of Mr. and Mrs. Moyat was evidently planned, and accelerated by a frown from their daughter. Blanche and I were left alone—whereupon I, too, rose to my feet.

"I must be going," I said, looking at the clock.

Blanche only laughed, and bade me sit down by her side.

"I'm so glad dad brought you in to-night," she said. "Did he say any thing to you?"

"What about?"

"Never mind," she answered archly. "Did he say anything at all?"

"He remarked once or twice that it was a wet night," I said.

"Stupid!" she exclaimed. "You know what I mean."

"He did make me a very kind offer," I admitted.

She looked at me eagerly.

"Well?"

"I told him that I am expecting an offer of work of some sort from the Duke. Of course it may not come. In any case, it was very kind of Mr. Moyat."

She drew a little closer to me.

"It was my idea," she whispered. "I put it into his head."

"Then it was very kind of you, too," I answered.

She was apparently disappointed. We sat for several moments in silence. Then she looked around with an air of mystery, and whispered still more softly into my ear—

"I haven't said a word about that—to anybody."

"Thank you very much," I answered. "I was quite sure that you would not, as you had promised."

Again there was silence. She looked at me with some return of that half fearsome curiosity which had first come into her eyes when I made my request.

"Wasn't the inquest horrid?" she said. "Father says they were five hours deciding—and there's old Joe Hassell; even now he won't believe that—that—he came from the sea."

"It isn't a pleasant subject," I said, quietly. "Let us talk of something else."

She was swinging a very much beaded slipper backwards and forwards, and gazing at it thoughtfully.

"I don't know," she said. "I can not help thinking of it sometimes. I suppose it is terribly wicked to keep anything back like that, isn't it?"

"If you feel that," I answered, "you had better go and tell your father everything."

She looked at me quickly.

"Now you're cross," she exclaimed. "I'm sure I don't know why."

"I am not cross," I said, "but I do not wish you to feel unhappy about it."

"I don't mind that," she answered, lifting her eyes to mine, "if it is better for you."

The door opened and Mr. Moyat appeared. Blanche was obviously annoyed. I was correspondingly relieved. I rose at once, and took my leave.

"Blanche got you to change your mind?" he said, looking at me closely.

"Miss Moyat hasn't tried," I answered, shaking him by the hand. "We were talking about something else."

Blanche pushed past her father, and came to let me out. We stood for a moment at the open door. She pointed down the street.

"It was just there he stopped me," she said in a low tone. "He was very pale, and he had such a slow, strange voice, just like a foreigner. It was in the shadow of the market-hall there. I wish I'd never seen him."

A note of real fear seemed to have crept into her voice. Her eyes were straining through the darkness. I forced a laugh as I lit my cigarette.

"You mustn't get fanciful," I declared. "Men die every day, you know, and I fancy that this one was on his last legs. Good-night."

Her lips parted as though in an answering greeting, but it was inaudible. As I looked round at the top of the street I saw her still standing there in the little flood of yellow light, gazing across towards the old market-hall.

CHAPTER VIII.

A WONDERFUL OFFER.

On my little table lay the letter I expected, large, square, and white. I tore it open with trembling fingers. The handwriting was firm and yet delicate. I knew at once whose it was.

"Rowchester, Tuesday.

"Dear Mr. Ducaine,—My father wishes me to say that he and Lord Chelsford will call upon you to-morrow morning, between ten and eleven o'clock. With best regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,
"Angela Habberly."

The letter slipped from my hands on to the table. Lord Chelsford was a Cabinet Minister and a famous man. What could he have to do with any appointment which the Duke might offer me? I read the few words over and over again. The handwriting, the very faint perfume which seemed to steal out of the envelope, a moment's swift retrospective thought, and my fancy had conjured her into actual life. She was there in the room with me, slim and shadowy, with her quiet voice and movements, and with that haunting, doubtful look in her dark eyes. What had she meant by that curious warning? What was the knowledge or the fear which inspired it? If one could only understand!

I sat down in my chair and tried to read, but the effort was useless. Directly opposite to me was that

ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST

Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carelessly ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.

BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS

Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nineteenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

CREAMERY INDUSTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

Mack Robertson, Dairy Instructor, Perth Co., Ont.

The creamery industry is one of growing importance in Western Ontario. A time was when creameries only existed in out of the way localities. To-day creameries are located in many of our best dairy sections. The high price received for creamery butter, together with the value of the skim milk for feeding stock, is making many dairy farmers "sit up and take notice". The result is that we have creameries now where they were never dreamt of a few years ago.

Mr. M. Robertson

We not only have more creameries but better ones. Many poor mismanaged creameries have been closed. They have been shaken from their foundations by good, well-managed creameries growing up in competition with them. It naturally follows, that if we have better managed creameries, we have better creamery managers. This is true. One by one we see the poor creamerymen being gradually crowded out and better men taking their places. Better creameries and better managers means that the patrons get better service. The better managers apply better business methods. They keep their weather eye on the best markets, on the most economical method of manufacture; on the leaks and losses. They do their utmost to prevent these. In short there is a great improvement in the business methods and sanitary conditions of our creameries.

NOT ENOUGH CREAM PRODUCED

While we have advanced in methods and conditions, we still have some difficulties. Much as we have gained, much more is to be desired. One regrettable fact is that the individual farm does not produce nearly as much cream as it might.

The explanation of this is the much discussed labor problem. Without sufficient and efficient help, dairying cannot be carried on successfully. Many farmers have ceased dairying, others have reduced their herds because of the labor problem. The great Canadian West has sucked the very vitality out of many of our rural sections by its continual drain on the younger population. Truly, the blessing. A curse because of its West has been both a curse and a stealing our best blood. A blessing because of the big and evergrowing market it has made for our dairy products.

CREAM HAULING COSTLY

This curtailing of production on individual farms affects the industry in another manner. Namely in the cream hauling. When production is curtailed it means that the hauler has to go that much further for his cream. When one farmer, through lack of help, ceases to be a producer of cream, it simply means that the cream hauler must go so much further to make up for the loss. This has happened so often in North Western Ontario that cream hauling has become a big problem.

It is a fair estimate to say that on the average a cream drawer in North Western Ontario drives one mile for every patron he receives cream from. For example, where a cream hauler collects cream from 30 patrons he will drive 30 miles. This is not overstated in the least and demonstrates the difficulties which creamerymen have to cope with in getting their cream hauled.

SMALL MARGIN OF PROFIT

It costs considerable in these times of high wages to hire a man. It costs more to hire a man and team to drive 30 miles every day, rain or shine. It eats a tremendous hole in Mr. Creameryman's pocket. Patrons do not realize the expense entailed in hauling the cream. To get good, honest cream haulers, at a rate that will leave any margin of profit is a problem that is changing the color of many a creameryman's hair, and that without the use of Alderney Butter Color.

However, without trouble we would be without that which stirs us up to do our best. Our creameries are advancing, patrons are giving their part of the work more intelligent thought and the season of 1910 will go down in history as one of the best for many a year.

FALL APPLE CROP

From Farm and Dairy.

Now that the entire crop of fall apples has been picked and pickers are busy harvesting the winter varieties, a fairly accurate estimate can be made as to what the apple crop will be this year. In a few orchards where good spraying and cultural methods have been followed, there will be a full crop. These orchards however, are few and far between. Farm and Dairy correspondents in all parts of Ontario report a short crop. Fall varieties averaged a fair crop but winter varieties, particularly in Western Ontario, will be very scarce. Many localities, which in previous years shipped large quantities of apples, will have only enough for local consumption. Mr. Wallace Megraw reports that instead of shipping 2,000 barrels from around Paisley, as usual, they will only ship about 40 barrels this year. The high winds on October 1st blew off a large portion of crop there, particularly in Eastern Ontario.

WIDE RANGE OF PRICES

Apple prices reported by Farm and Dairy correspondents range all the way from 75 cents for fall varieties on the trees to $1.00 for No. 1 Spys on the car. The average price paid for winter varieties on the tree runs from $1.25 to $1.75 a barrel with $1.50 as an average. It is interesting to note that higher prices have been realized by members of the Fruit Growers' Associations than by growers who deal directly with the buyers. J. G. Waite, Northumberland County, reports that while buyers are paying $2.00 to $2.50 picked and packed, apples sold through the associations are bringing $2.75 to $3.00.

QUALITY AND SPRAYING

More spraying has been done this year than in any previous year. The quality of the apples is very good. That the members of the fruit growers associations are compelled to spray their orchards accounts to a large extent for the extra prices which they have been receiving for their fruit.

Apples are not nearly an average crop this year. Most of the apples have been sold at $1.50 a barrel, tree run.—F. S. Wallbridge, Hastings Co., Ont.

HIGH PRICES THROUGH ASSOCIATIONS

Crops bordering on the lake are good but further back they are poor. Apples are selling at $1.25 a barrel on the trees, $2.00 to $2.50 picked and packed, and those sold through the associations, $2.75 to $3.00 picked and packed.—John G. Waite, Northumberland Co., Ont.

Apples are one-third of an average crop. The price of apples ranges from $1.00 to $1.25 a barrel.—Cecil Walsh, Durham Co., Ont.

Recent winds have reduced merchantable apples to one-quarter of a crop. Fall apples sold at $1.00, winter apples at $1.25 a barrel, on trees.—J. L., Northumberland Co., Ont.

We have no winter apples at all. Fall apples are a poor sample. We have none to sell.—Wm. Barton, Durham Co., Ont.

Spys and Baldwins are a fair crop but other varieties are light, the quality poor. Fall apples are bringing 75 cents; winter varieties, $1.00 a barrel.—Jas. McHolm, Durham Co., Ont.

BLOWN OFF BY WINDS

Apples are not as heavy as in previous years. Probably one-half the crop was blown off in the recent wind storm. Prices range from $1.00 to $1.25 a barrel.—J. C. Montgomery, Durham Co., Ont.

The crop will not be over one-quarter, of an average and not up to the average in quality. The high wind on October 1st, blew off the greater portion of the fruit. Prices range from $1.25 to $1.50 a barrel.—Jas. Stonehouse, Ontario Co., Ont.

All apples will be required for local use. Average price will be about $1.25 for fall, and $2.00 for winter varieties: 75 cents to $1.00, on the trees.—Thos. Hart, Ontario Co., Ont.

Apples are very scarce. Most of them have been sold at $2.00 to $2.50, the buyer picking the apples. We are within a marketable distance from Toronto which accounts for the high price which we receive.—W. G. Horne, Peel Co., Ont.

HIGH PRICES BUT APPLES WORMY

Apples will be less than half a crop. They are very wormy. Prices offered our association are $3.00 for winter and $2.75 for fall varieties.—Geo. Leslie, Dalton Co., Ont.

The crop will not exceed 10 per cent. of an average. Apples, $1.50 to $2.00 a barrel. No. No. 1's have been packed.—Adam Brown, Grey Co., Ont.

The crop is a total failure. Instead of 2,000 barrels for sale in this section, there will be about 40.—Wallace Megraw, Bruce Co., Ont.

ORCHARDS THAT PRODUCED WELL

Apples are very light. A few orchards are producing well. Buyers are paying $1.50 a barrel and upwards. The same fruit would net $2 to $2.50 from the fruit growers' association.—J. H. Cohoe, Brant Co., Ont.

Crop will be below the average but of good quality. Prices range from $1.00 to $1.50 a barrel.—Geo. Oliver, Oxford Co., Ont.

The crop in well sprayed orchards is about average; in poorly sprayed orchards there are scarcely any apples. Prices range from $1.25 to $2.00.—J. C. Harris, Oxford Co., Ont.

Prices range from $1.25 to $1.50 a barrel, picked.—J. C. Foster, Norfolk Co., Ont.

THE NORFOLK ASSOCIATION

We have received $3.00 a barrel through the Norfolk Fruit Growers' Association. Apples have been sold to buyers at from $1.50 to $2.00 on the trees.—J. G. Blaney, Norfolk Co., Ont.

Eczema on Leg for 25 Years

I have been treated by doctors for twenty-five years for a bad case of eczema on my leg. They did their best, but failed to cure it. My own doctor had advised me to have my leg cut off, but I said I would try the Cuticura Remedies first. He said, "try them if you like but I do not think they will do any good." At this time my leg was peeled from the knee down, my foot was like a piece of raw flesh and I had to walk on crutches. I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. After the first two treatments the swelling went down and in two months' use of the Cuticura Remedies my leg was cured and the new skin grown on. The doctor could not believe his own eyes when he saw that Cuticura had cured me and said that he would use Cuticura for his own patients. But for the Cuticura Remedies I might have lost my life. I am truly grateful for the wonderful cure that Cuticura wrought. I have many grandchildren and they are frequent users of Cuticura and I always recommend it most highly as a sure and economical cure for skin troubles.

A RECORD IN GUN FIRING.

The Heaviest Broadside Ever Discharged From a Warship.

The most dramatic incident of the gunnring trials of the new Brazilian battleships Minas Geraes and Sao Paulo, was the firing of an entire brondside simultaneously, making a terrific discharge, the heaviest broadside ever fired and an event unparalleled in the history of ballistics.

The five turrets of the ship were all trained on the port beam, all the ten guns being given an elevation of seven degrees and loaded with a full charge of 285 pounds of cordite. The ten twelve-inch guns, monster weapons fifty feet long, each discharged a shell of 850 pounds weight, making a total of 8,500 pounds "weight of metal." At the same time were fired the eleven 4.7 guns mounted on the Sao Paulo's broadside, each sending off a projectile weighing forty-five pounds and adding 495 pounds to the discharge, making up a total broadside fire amounting to 9,995 pounds—a record discharge of destructive projectiles. These vessels mount as light guns in addition six three-pounders on each broadside, which fired in action would bring up the total possible weight of metal fired from the ship to 9,013 pounds.

The most notable feature of the Minas Geraes is her superimposed turrets. The wings of the navigating bridge are removed for action, the boats discarded and davits swung back out of the way while the guns are being fired.—London Illustrated News.

New Form of Door.

One of the oldest of human inventions is the door swinging on hinges at one side. Some weaving insects, such as trapdoor spiders, employ a similar device, but nothing is too old or too good to escape the efforts at improvement of modern inventors.

A Belgian inventor has devised a door of a new type consisting of two triangular parts which close together on a diagonal line running from one lower corner of the door opening to the opposite upper corner. The two parts, or leaves, are pivoted in such a manner that when opened they swing into partitions in the ceiling, leaving an entirely unobstructed passage. Being carefully counterbalanced, the leaves require slight force to move them.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Ship Money.

Charles I. was badly in need of money, and his attorney-general in the course of his antiquarian researches discovered that in the dim ages of the past the crown had issued writs to the cities and towns on the coast requiring them to provide vessels for the royal needs, and he suggested that this ancient right might be brought into use again. Instead of the actual vessels a money contribution might be exacted instead. Thus the king would be able to tax a larger part of the realm while theoretically observing the laws. Writs for ship money were accordingly issued, but the patriot John Hampden declared that they were illegal and raised such a protest against them that they were practically nullified.

Montreal's Dead City.

The population of Montreal is 600,000, yet that of the city of the dead behind the mountain is still more numerous. It is stated that in the Roman Catholic cemetery nearly 400,000 are sleeping their last sleep.

A COUP DE GRACE.

It Removed an Objectionable Chaperon.

By STACY E. BAKER.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

There were three girls of them—Beth, who was past twenty; Nora, nineteen, and Belle, the "baby," just turned eighteen.

It was a happy and well organized family in spite of the fact that it was motherless and that Father Kepner, who was a traveling salesman, was away a great deal of the time.

Marie Lester was a cousin of the Kepners. She, too, was motherless as well as fatherless, and it occurred to the elder Kepner that a home with his daughters and their privileges would be eagerly accepted by her in lieu of the position for which the girl's letters indicated that she was searching. He sent for her.

"But we don't want that old maid," objected Belle, pouting prettily. "We do very well alone."

"It is the gossip of the neighborn that I am thinking of, dearie," explained her father. "Elgin isn't so large a town that a family can be overlooked, and you girls, with your beaus, will be sure to be talked about if you are not properly chaperoned."

The Kepner trio were handsome girls. They were popular. The best young men in the town were glad to be numbered among their friends, and the Kepner house was generally the winter Mecca of the young people.

Beth was a stately brunette, tall, slim and as perfectly confident as became an older sister.

Nora was a blond, yellow haired, daintily feminine.

Belle was a nonedescript. It was she who raised the most strenuous objections to the importation of Cousin Marie, but in the end the father won his point.

The cousin was, according to family records, thirty-two years of age. A sedate sobersides was expected to materialize. Imagine the surprise of the waiting trio, then, when a dapper damsel, modish of dress and strikingly handsome, approached them as they were waiting at the station for the new social charge d'affaires and introduced herself as the looked for relative.

"Why, I—I"— she began.

Ordered to Hospital

FOR OPERATION FOR ACUTE INDIGESTION—DID NOT GO AND WAS CURED BY

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The doctors seem to have made the common mistake of dosing the stomach when the real source of trouble was with the liver and kidneys. Anyway Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills made a complete cure and here is the record:

Mrs. F. O. Bacon, Baldwin's Mills, Que., writes: "I was very sick and the doctors said I must go to the hospital for a surgical operation. I had acute indigestion and the liver and kidneys did not act. I did not want to undergo an operation so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and have used them ever since. "I am feeling well now and doing my own work for a family of seven. I think there is no equal for acute indigestion and liver and kidney troubles such as I had and they and nothing else made me well again. There is no medicine I like half so well, for this did wonders for me."

The real serious cases of indigestion almost always have their location in the bowels and can only be reached by making the liver and kidneys active. No medicine regulates the liver, kidneys and bowels so nicely and so promptly as do Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers; or Edmanson Bates & Co., Toronto. Do not be satisfied with a substitute or you will be disappointed.

Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance

"I suffered for many years from what some people call epilepsy. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine cured me, and you can imagine how thankful I am."
M. I. COFFMAN,
Coldwater, Mich.

"My daughter was cured with Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, after having been afflicted with fits for five years."
PETER McAULEY,
Springfield, Mass.

"For a year my little boy had spasms every time he got a little cold. Since taking Dr. Miles' Nervine he has never had one of these spasms."
MRS. MYRTLE DAGUE,
Rochester, Ind.

"My daughter couldn't talk or walk from St. Vitus' dance. Seven bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine entirely cured her."
MRS. NANNIE LAND,
Ethel, Ind.

"Until my son was 30 years old he had fits right along. We gave him seven bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. He has not had a fit since he began on the fifth bottle."
MRS. R. DUNTLEY,

"Exactly," laughed Cousin Marie in a well modulated and pleasant contralto. "You expected the Lester old maid to arrive resplendent in corkscrew curls, wearing an ancient bell hooped gown of the vintage of '52, but unfortunately I couldn't fit into the scheme."

The Kepner trio decided that they would like this cousin.

They didn't.

This is why:

Beth, Nora and Belle were all blessed with "steady company," youths of means and promise, with constant vows of fidelity ever hovering on their lips.

Gradually the enamored ones began to be won by the bright ways of the most experienced maiden, to the chagrined discomfiture of the sisters three.

Marie Lester was handsome. Better, she knew how to dress, and it was soon brought home to the girls that if she was unmarried it was solely because she chose to remain so. She showed a most remarkable faculty in bringing men to her diminutive feet.

Beth's young man was a particularly susceptible youth, and he succumbed first. The great brown eyes of the newcomer seemed to exert a potent influence over him, and the soft touch of her hand on his brought the bright red to his cheeks.

Beth noted this with amusement at first, and then—was it jealousy?

Shortly afterward Nora's tender swain cast longing eyes in the direction of the chaperon whenever she was present.

The faithlessness of the lovers of her sisters amused the spritely Belle until it suddenly dawned upon her that her own particular young man was tremendously enamored.

It was then that a council of war was called.

"Something must be done," despairingly began Nora. "We can't stand this much longer. Why, the girl has the boys in a daze. They seem to have forgotten that we exist."

"It doesn't say much for the constancy of men," cynically added Beth.

"She is the 'unknown quantity,'" asserted Belle in the extreme wisdom of her youth, "a city girl, you know. If any of us live to her ripe old age I dare say we shall know as much as she."

Her sisters laughed. Belle's assertions always amused them.

"What are we going to do about it?" asked Nora.

The chaperon, even at that moment, entertained in the front parlor the three thralled swains.

"I have a scheme," proposed Belle after a tense second of thought. "It may work out all right. Both of you girls know that Marie is proud; also that she has a miserable complexion, and she always has a powder puff handy at all times to make that doll face of hers look the part."

"Don't be petty," cautioned Beth severely. "If you have a 'scheme,' as you call it, explain it to us."

"I'll not," snapped Belle. "If I did you would object to it. I'll only say this—if you see anything unusual tomorrow night don't give the joke away by laughing. Just remain serenely indifferent, as if whatever happens were nothing unusual at all. If you will just intimate some time previous to this that 'Marie, poor dear, is a little—eh—peculiar at times' it will help a lot."

Beth and Nora smiled at the brave attempt of the youngest to adjust things, but mutually agreed to give her free rein.

The next night, as usual, Marie did more than her share of entertaining, and the visitors seemed content to have it so. The evening bade fair to adhere to its usual routine.

The girl from Chicago had a habit of excusing herself frequently for a few moments at a time. Tonight was no exception to the rule. On several different occasions the gallants were left to the tender care of the girls whom they were supposed to have come to see, and the three sisters forgivingly strove to entertain them during the absence of the main attraction.

Young James, the lad formerly attending to the book and call of Belle, was the chaperon's favorite of the evening. Only when the woman left the room did the youngster seem to cease at such times the moan on his beardless cheeks and the manifest uneasiness of him as he glanced guiltily at the girl proved that he was not yet past redemption.

"Ah, you rogue, I believe you have been flirting during my absence!"

The chaperon, returned, found her interesting youth almost reclined by the time improving Belle.

Jones started guiltily, cast an appealing eye at his rightful owner and again turned, magnetized, to the alluring voice.

"Oh, Miss Marie"— he started, then gulped a couple of times and stared at the boy knowing Marie with great, round eyes.

Smith and Brown, observant ones, eclipsed for the evening, also stared.

Fortunately for the success of Belle's plan, none of the three was possessed of a high sense of humor.

Marie seemed puzzled for a moment by the dazed glance of the trio, but finally as the girls kept up a distracting conversation, favoring their relative with only a casual glance, she concluded that this was only a burst of visual homage on the part of the enamored ones.

Gradually, however, the girl from Chicago grew embarrassed before the lout like glances of these country town admirers, and a cautious hand investigated stealthily every curl and strand of the bronze red hair mass that was her chief glory. Nothing surprising was revealed to her sensitive fingers. She breathed easier.

Smothering what uneasiness remained, Marie carried on a brilliant conversation, but the brilliancy was confined to her end of it. From a conversational standpoint the gay Lotharios were equal to nothing.

With a relieved sigh the chaperon returned with her relatives to the parlor after bidding the young men good night.

"Oh, Marie," bibbled Belle as she turned quickly to the older girl, "what a clever and most original idea! I could hardly keep my face straight."

Marie stared, puzzled.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"You looked so absurd, so ridiculous," giggled Nora, "and the boys were so—er—perfectly thunderstruck. It was such an unusual joke."

"I thought I would die at the expression on Jow's face," contributed Beth, with a reminiscent laugh. She glanced admiringly at her relative.

"I—I don't understand," stammered Marie. With a great deal of malicious pleasure the trio noticed the girl's embarrassment.

"Why, your 'black face' act," explained Belle innocently.

The girl from Chicago rubbed investigative fingers over her face and brought them away—black! With a little shriek she picked up her skirts and fled.

"How did you do it?" whispered Beth and Nora in unison.

"It was easy. I simply substituted lampblack for her powder, broke the gas mantle and hid every match in the house.

The next morning the chaperon was conspicuously absent.

A note left behind read:

Suddenly called to Chicago. Won't return. MARIE.

It was thus that the trio came again into its own, and, being wise young ladies, no explanation of Marie Lester's peculiar action was given the repentant lovers.

GERMAN NAVAL PROGRESS ❁ GENEVA'S REGRET ❁ MEETINGOF RACES

EAST AND WEST TO MEET IN LONDON

First Universal Races Congress, Organized by Dr. Adler, of Columbia University, Will Be Held Next Year.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

ONE of the most remarkable congresses ever held in London is to take place next year soon after the coronation. It is to be a meeting of East and West and will be known as the "First Universal Races Congress." It was originated as far back as 1906 by Dr. Felix Adler, professor of social ethics of Columbia University, and the responses to the appeal have been so numerous that up to the present more than fifty nations have intimated their intention of being represented.

There are thirty presidents of parliaments, a dozen British governors, nearly the same number of prime ministers, 130 professors of international law, more than forty oversea bishops and 120 members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration of the Second Hague Conference, and the general secretary is Mr. G. Spiller, of Hampstead, who has gone to America to make fuller arrangements there.

The writers of papers include many eminent men, such as Sir John Macdonell, Master of the Supreme Court; Sir Charles Bruce, late Governor of Mauritius; Sir Sydney Olivier, Governor of Jamaica; Sir Henry Johnson, the well known traveller and explorer; Dr. Giuseppe Sergi, of Rome; His Excellency Wu Ting-fang, late Chinese Ambassador at Washington; Mr. F. C. Croxton, of Washington, chief statistician of the United States Immigration Commission; Mons. Leon Bourgeois, late French Prime Minister, and a host of others, all equally eminent and well known.

The object of the congress is to discuss, in the light of modern knowledge and the modern conscience, the general relations existing between the peoples of the West and those of the East—between the white and the colored peoples—with a view to encouraging between them a fuller understanding, the most friendly feelings and a heartier co-operation, political questions being subordinated to this comprehensive end.

STARS PROPHESY IRISH TROUBLES

Definite Predictions in Moore's Almanac, Which Is Now in its 214th Year.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

MOORE'S Almanac for the ensuing year has just been issued, and Englishmen who pin their faith to the long distance predictions of this volume as to the future find many signposts of trouble ahead. This almanac, too, speaks with some authority, for it now is enjoying the 214th year of its career, and, therefore, has some standing in the very highest quarters. Most of the forecasts drawn from the "voice of the stars" are sufficiently vague to cover anything that may happen. Among the most definite prophecies are those relating to Ireland.

In February the "little green isle" will begin a period of great misfortune. "for Saturn enters her ruling sign and remains therein during the coming three years." "Much sorrow" will be its lot in April, "serious troubles" are foretold for May, "terrible happenings" in August, while disaster will pursue throughout the year and the harvest will be a failure.

Referring to the United Kingdom generally, it is held that "the culmination of Mercury shows an increase of trade and commerce, but being in square to Neptune, shows scandal in high life." Also the vague declaration that "Jupiter in the fifth is favorable to theatres and music halls, but the affliction of Venus in the seventh house shows a large crop of divorces, and many unpleasant revelations will be brought to light."

This same "affliction of the seventh house," whatever that may be, is going to cause the government trouble in August, and it is warned to be on the alert against international difficulties. Altogether, it would appear that a busy time is ahead.

TRADE IN OSTRICH FEATHERS BOOMING

The Price Fast Going Up and the Weight Sold Increases in Proportion.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

The trade in ostrich plumes is booming, and importers of these feathers are being hard pushed by Court milliners and dressmakers in anticipation of the coronation season next year. The weight of feathers is increasing with every sale in Mincing Lane, and at the last bi-monthly sale the weight sold amounted to 113,000 pounds, an advance of 15,000 pounds in two months, but that does not nearly meet the demand, orders pouring in from the West which it will take a considerable time to meet.

"The trade in ostrich plumes," an ostrich feather merchant told a correspondent, "is like the trade in diamonds. Its volume hitherto has depended on the prosperity of America. When things are good in America then trade is good for us. Now it is booming, for ostrich plumes are sure to be all the fashion next spring. At present feathers vary in price from $20 downward, but, of course, super feathers go to the making of the expensive gowns, and feathers long prized as the aiming feature to adorn the largest heads and hats."

Geneva Loses Its Teacher of Musical Rhythm, Mons. Emile Jacques-Dalcroze

PUPILS ARE TRAINED TO EXPRESS EMOTION

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

GENEVA.—Mons. Emile Jacques-Dalcroze is leaving Geneva, and great is the regret felt here at his departure. What Geneva loses Dresden will gain, for the Saxon capital, fully appreciative of the importance of the new school of music which Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze has created, made him a splendid pecuniary offer to go to Dresden, where, as a further inducement to him, he has been offered a building to form a school of his own and the use of the Royal Theatre of that great musical centre. And so, reluctantly, the initiator of the method of teaching musical rhythm by means of gymnastic exercises leaves here.

On the eve of his departure Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze was good enough to allow me to attend one of his classes, a privilege granted to very few. And, be it said right off, it was an artistic treat worth going very far to see. It took place in the smaller hall of the big building known as the Salle de la Constitution. There, at half-past five in the afternoon, some couple of score of pupils were assembled, a lot of comely maidens and young girls of pretty well all ages, from twenty down to ten or perhaps less.

UNCONVENTIONAL DRESS.

They were clothed in close-fitting combination blue knitted garments, which left the legs free down from above the knees, short-cut arms and a certain amount of décolleté. Their feet were bare. Their hair was almost invariably dressed in Greek style, and the general effect was most graceful and harmonious. Strange as it may seem, the French have taken objection to the above simple clothing of the figure as indecent, whereas the Germans have accepted it as being proper and right. In my judgment, none but those morally degenerate or of prurient minds could see any indecency in it. Put skirts upon those naturally graceful figures and you remove the entire classic spirit of the exercises.

For one hour and a half those girls went through a series of the most graceful motions possible to imagine. Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze's system is nothing new, but for those who read this and have not seen his pupils work a little explanation is necessary. It must not be confounded in any way with the dances of Miss Duncan, Miss Maud Allan, Miss Olga Desmond, Miss Ruth St. Denis or the Weisenthal sisters. Theirs is dancing to music. The Jacques-Dalcroze system is not to teach dancing, but to cultivate the musical instincts latent in his pupils by inciting them to a spontaneous and natural plastic realisation of musical rhythms. And he wishes it specially understood that his pupils are not dancers, but that they are devoting themselves to musical instruction and not to theatrical dancing.

TRAINED TO EXPRESS EMOTION.

His pupils above all are musically inspired, and simply express, with the movements of their bodies the emotions which music arouses in their souls. They are trained to the end that the body, under the influence of artistic rhythms, becomes susceptible to them—rousing itself to realise them quite naturally, without timidity and without exaggeration.

Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze, by his method, seeks to give his pupils a new mentality, to furnish them with force of character, to awaken dormant faculties, to inspire musical sentiment and artistic emotion, which he maintains must needs be the elementary groundwork for any one aspiring to become a musician in the true sense of the term. The prevailing idea of old, was that it is only the natural born musician who can become inspired; but here it is that the musical talent can be created in almost any one by the gymnastic rhythmical education.

And so, with the professor at the piano, these girls proceeded to go through a most graceful and artistic series of exercises, which may perhaps best be termed a compromise between dancing and calisthenics, all to the most perfect harmony of motion imaginable, a poem of corporeal rhythm.

A number of pals of the girls, who sat beside me, told me that it was Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze's happy touch in the pianoforte which caused the perfection in rhythmical motion of the result which these girls showed on occasions like their every movement, and that other players were not so successful. That may be, for the professor has made this his life work.

SOME OF THE EXERCISES.

There were exercises for the independence of the limbs, to display the mastery of the brain over the body. The feet beat "trois temps" and the hands two, in the same period. The right hand beats "trois temps" and the left "deux temps."

There were those for the developing of spontaneous will. The right hand beats "trois, temps," the left "quatre temps," and at the word "hop" the reverse. Third, there were exercises for the independence of the limbs and will. The feet beat "quatre temps" and the hands brought together marking syncopes; at the word "hop" the hands marked time, the feet syncopes. There were the sol-fa-ing exercises, enrhythmic movements truly surprising, and all done with the grace of high artistic sentiment.

At one moment proper breathing movements were practised with the windows open, then singing. The professor rapidly struck five notes from different octaves, the class entoned, always starting from fa in the scales to which the notes belonged. At one time the whole class was retreating, with various expressions given to the music of feelings which would cause a retiring movement. At another it was a running movement, keeping time to the music, and then all at once when the climax arrived it was represented by a graceful leap in the air.

Most of the older girls are qualified as professors. Many of Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze's former pupils are in various parts of Germany, very busy and much sought after, for the system is being taken up by the practical Germans with gusto.

As for Mons. Jacques-Dalcroze, he is a modest man, who cares to say little about himself, but of whom, one feels sure, much will be heard of hereafter.

Sir Evelyn Wood Strongly Urges Compulsory Service

SOUNDS CALL TO ARMS

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

AMONG prominent Englishmen who have most recently actively advocated the enactment of universal compulsory military training of the male population of the United Kingdom is Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood. Affirming that it is the duty of every man to defend his country in times of national danger, he contends that to do so effectively every man must be systematically trained as a soldier in times of peace. To this end, in so far as it may be obtained in existing circumstances, he has been foremost in urging the widespread establishment of miniature rifle ranges.

"It is now generally admitted," said he, when he recently presided, at the invitation of Lady St. Helier, at the opening of such a practice range at Cold Ash, in Berkshire, "that, however inadequate the training on a miniature range may be in comparison with that obtainable on an open range, yet nine-tenths of the difficulty of service shooting may be overcome on a miniature range.

"For many years, both officially and privately, I have advocated compulsory service for home defence. I believe the need of compulsory service is all the greater to-day. The difficulty of persuading the British public of this necessity is partly due to the immunity which they have enjoyed from the horrible sufferings inseparable from an invasion, successful or unsuccessful.

"If any of you here live to see our country invaded—and, humanly speaking, unless the whole male population is trained to arms, I believe some of you certainly will see that result—it is well that you should realise what would happen right here when, say, ten thousand men of an enemy's army reach Newbury.

"In the Franco-Prussian War on one occasion the general, wishing to keep his soldiers in good heart, ordered double rations to be issued from the intendant, and the storekeeper, of Pressburzen, in Alsace, a Prussian who frequently resided, told in a personal narrative of the war a glorious story of the resort to a couple of his customers, the directors of Lloyd's [illegible]

GENERAL SIR E. B. WOOD
(Bt. 1st class)

"They had eleven loaves in the house, and gave up to a requisitioning party all but one, which they concealed by making a little girl sit on it. She got so tired of the uncomfortable seat that the loaf then was hidden in a dovecote, where it was found by another party of soldiers. The father pleaded that his children must starve if the loaf was taken, and the soldiers left them half of it. As the clergyman writes of the invaders, 'Though we suffered terribly, the soldiers had to live.

"My main interest in the village was on account of the devoted courage of General Michel's cuirassier brigade, which in repeated efforts to gain time for the infantry to retire, accepted death and was annihilated. In a French convalescent home at Brighton there is now one of [illegible] of the cuirassiers who survived. He says that, terrible as were the battle scenes, requisitioning a French village and carrying off from the's own people every morsel of food was still worse.

"It is high time that we awoke to realities. I believe that compulsory military training should be enforced at the earliest moment."

"GERMAN WAR CRAFT MODELS"

"Dreadnoughts Are Masterpieces of Design," Says Correspondent.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

WILHELMSHAVEN.—On board the Westfalen, flagship of the first squadron of the German high-sea fleet, the second of German Dreadnoughts, I was welcomed by Vice Admiral Pohl, in command. The Vice Admiral spoke to me of his very great appreciation of the United States navy and of his high regard for its officers.

In China and elsewhere he has learned to know the value of these officers, and among them he has many friends. Before we parted he drank the health of the American navy.

The Admiral is certainly one of the most capable and valued of German flag officers and he bade me look round on the ships of his magnificent command with natural pride in the service to which he belongs. Two days ago the battle ships Zähringen and Wittelsbach went out of commission, turning over their companies to the Rheinland and the Posen, so that now, with his flagship and the Nassau, Admiral Pohl has under his orders the first homogeneous division of German Dreadnoughts.

OTHERS TO JOIN COMMAND.

The Admiral tells me that next year—perhaps one of them earlier—three other Dreadnoughts, the Thüringen, Helgoland and Ostfriesland, will join his command.

Splendid is the appearance of these German Dreadnoughts as they lie in the noble harbor which German genius and enterprise, working steadily onward, have created. They do not resemble in disposition of armament the plans of the new battle ships of other nations. In the Westfalen and her three sisters, as is well known, there are barbettes forward and abaft, and two barbettes on either broadside, giving six big guns to fire ahead, six astern and eight on either beam. I observed, too, that in the Ostfriesland, which is in an advanced stage of construction, but without her guns on board, the same arrangement is preserved.

Nothing is known as to the plans of future ships, but there will almost certainly be changes. I am told that all barbettes may yet be placed on the centre line, as in American and the new British ships.

The view of the Vice Admiral is that the development of the German navy is in consonance with the genius of the German people. "We know what is an object," he said, "and we go steadily forward to its attainment." This is truly the characteristic of the German race.

SEES WORKING OF GUNS.

From stem to stern, from bridge and conning tower to boiler and engine rooms I have visited every part of the Westfalen, and believe that I am the first foreigner to be allowed that privilege.

I have also visited the submerged torpedo rooms, and have seen the whole system, the internal economy of the ship. After much experience of the ships of other nations I am able to say that the new German Dreadnoughts are masterpieces of design.

Admiral Pohl drew my attention to the advantages of the harbor, with its splendid new entrance through two great masonry locks, and said that he could take out his whole squadron of eight battle ships, with attendant cruisers, in a single tide.

The sea battalion, which consists of a fine set of men, has returned from exercises and marched through the town to its barracks. The men are still clad in blue, but some men here have the new gray-green uniform which is to become the service dress of both navy and army.

OFFICIAL'S TASK LIKE SOLOMON'S

Public Vaccinator's Problem in Case of a Child, "Half Italian," Its Father Declares.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

ACCORDING to the British Medical Journal a public vaccinator has been confronted with a curious problem. The father of a child who had attained the age of four months, and whose name appeared on the public vaccinator's list, wrote to that official a letter in which he explained that he was not, unlike many Englishmen, a conscientious objector to vaccination. But his wife, so he explained, was an Italian, and desired to bring up the child in the manner followed in her native country, where the child would be vaccinated at the school age and not in early infancy.

"My wife wished me to say to you," concluded the communication, "that the child is half Italian, and if the English government enforces vaccination it must undertake to confine the effects of vaccination to the English portion of the infant. She claims the protection of the Italian Consul for the Italian half of the boy."

The question, which is actually pending, has brought no definite suggestions from the vaccinators, and it is held that consideration of the problem presented [illegible] a comparatively easy task when he learned about his linguistic division.

ADMIRAL'S FIGURES PROVE UNRELIABLE

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

As the naval question will be the subject of much discussion when Parliament reassembles next month, it is not surprising that Lord Charles Beresford should have taken time by the forelock and, addressed two open letters to the Prime Minister on the subject of the naval policy of his government.

The real interest of these communications lies in the accuracy and reliability of the figures which the Admiral has put together as to the relative positions of the fleets of Great Britain and those of Germany, Austria and Italy in the financial year 1913-1914. Unfortunately, Lord Charles has been somewhat extravagant in his estimates regarding the fleets of the last three named Powers, while he has been unable to include in his total of British vessels those to be built next year. The number of these is at present unknown, of course, but they will join the fighting line several months before the termination of what Lord Charles terms the critical period.

Dealing with Dreadnoughts alone, Lord Charles Beresford estimates that three years hence the position under existing arrangements will be:—Great Britain, 25 ships; Germany, 21; Italy, 4, and Austria, 4, or a total of 33 British against 29 for the Triple Alliance. The figure for Germany is that given by Mr. Asquith in July during the debate on the shipbuilding vote and is inclusive of the four armored ships which she will begin next year. The eight ships for Austria and Italy, however, are at least problematical. Only two are actually building at Trieste, and the money for them has yet to be voted by the delegations, although there is little doubt that they will eventually become government vessels.

Italy has launched one ship and begun three others, but her constructive capacity is such that not more than two will be ready early in 1914, allowing four years as the period for building. Most of the Italian battle ships now in commission, which are less than two-thirds the size of the new Dreadnoughts, have occupied six years in construction.

Turning to the ships of the pre-Dreadnought era, we find that early in 1914 Great Britain will possess forty battle ships not more than twenty years old, their total displacement being 589,385 tons. The German navy will include twenty such vessels, with a total displacement of 230,565 tons. Italy will have eight and Austria twelve pre-Dreadnought battle ships, with a combined tonnage of 220,517, or a total for the three Powers of the Triple Alliance of 451,082 tons, as compared with the 589,385 tons of the British ships. The British superiority, therefore, will be equal to nearly thirty per cent.

In England's Favor.

The position is even more favorable to Great Britain when the armored cruisers of the pre-Dreadnought period are considered. In 1914 England will have thirty-five of these vessels, all under twenty years of age from date of launch, with a total displacement of 416,800 tons. Germany will have nine, with a combined tonnage of 94,074; Italy a similar number, displacing together 73,814 tons, and Austria two, of 13,336 tons.

The aggregate displacement of the armored cruisers of the Triple Alliance will therefore be 181,224 tons, while the British aggregate, as shown above, will more than double this total.

Taking next protected and unarmored cruisers for the defence of commerce, with which Lord Charles deals in his second letter, the relative figures for 1914 should be:—Great Britain, 58 vessels, of an aggregate displacement of 324,115 tons; Germany, 20 vessels, of 187,451 tons; Italy, 4 vessels, of 7,534 tons, and Austria 5, of 14,405 tons.

England will therefore possess a strength in unarmored, as in armored, cruisers of more than twice that of Germany, Italy and Austria combined.

In regard to destroyers there will be under fifteen years old a total of 194 British boats early in 1914, with a combined displacement of 90,508 tons. This figure excludes, of course, any which may be provided in the next two programmes. Excluding in the same way those boats to be built under the 1911 and 1912 programmes, Germany will have at the same time 109 vessels, displacing in the aggregate 58,892 tons. Italy will have, according to present arrangements, 23, of 7,590 tons, and Austria 12, of 4,596 tons, or a total for the Triple Alliance of 144 boats, with an aggregate displacement of 70,078 tons.

No Inferiority in Size.

The slight inferiority in numbers, but not in size, is quite outweighed by the torpedo boats, for in this category Great Britain includes the thirty-six turbine driven coastal destroyers, which surpass many of the foreign destroyers; while in regard to submarines, England has provided for eighty-four, or, if the original Hollands and the A class boats are ruled out as obsolete, sixty-eight, as compared with eight for Germany and seven each for Austria and Italy.

Much depends upon the provision made next year for battle ships, and in the next two years for cruisers and torpedo craft, but the above figures can hardly be said to support the contention of Lord Charles Beresford that three years hence the naval defence of the empire will be fraught with danger "without gravity I believe it to be difficult to exaggerate."

SHOPKEEPERS IN SOCIETY SUCCEED

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

IT is not considered nowadays by any means a ban to the ranks of the "upper circle" to be associated in any way with trade. Indeed, the number of women well up in the ranks of society who are taking to trade either as means of adding to their depleted purses or from the pure love of it, grows every year.

The most recent recruit to the ranks of fashionable shopkeepers is Lady Angela Forbes, who has followed in the footsteps of Mrs. Patrick Heron-Maxwell and Mrs. Wellesley, a relation through marriage with the Duke of Wellington, and opened a flower shop in George street, Portman square, over which she has for a sign, "My Shop," written in neat gilt letters. Lady Angela has always been praised for her business skill in achieving great success at bazaars organised for the sake of charity, and she does not leave her new shop to hired saleswomen. She superintends everything herself and is there to wait on her customers, who are, of course, mostly of her own circle.

But the English women belonging to aristocratic families who either serve or help served "behind the counter" are by no means few. Indeed, it is just about twenty years ago since Lady Granville Gordon created a bit of a sensation and set the example for others by opening a hat store in Park street, Grosvenor square, under the name of "Lierre," which, standing for ivy, is the badge of her family. Attending to her shop herself, she soon set up a big custom.

Mrs. "Jack" Cumming, a very popular hostess in London, also made a big success as a fashionable milliner, her hats being for a time all the rage. The well known hat shop in Dover street which went by the name of "Lavenue" was founded by Lady Rachel Byng. For several years Lady Westmeath kept shop in Bond street, and did a great business in the most exquisite lingerie, frocks, artistic tea gowns and garden hats, made by her own workers in Essex. Lady Bessborough, when she was Viscountess Duncannon, kept a shop of the same sort in the West End.

There are other society women who have even made laundrying their trade, though without allowing their real names to be made public. There are others who have registries for servants. Mrs. Granville Knox opened a manicure establishment, and other well known society women followed her example with profit to themselves and pleasure to their friends.

The Duchess of Abercorn has a creamery near her Irish home, Baronscourt, near Belfast, from which she supplies many of the West End mansions, as well as some of the big Atlantic liners; Miss Frances Wellesley keeps a school for women gardeners in Sussex, while a well known old curiosity shop in the Brompton road is also the property of a society woman who keeps her name a secret.

MYSTERIOUS PLAGUE IN ENGLISH COUNTY

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A mysterious and extremely fatal disease, to which doctors up to the present are unable to give a name, has broken out in Holbrook, a village in Suffolk, and carried off four persons after illnesses lasting only two or three days.

A medical correspondent who has been investigating the disease writes that the symptoms point to a devastating and rapidly spreading plague which is rarely met with in England. While the high fever, sudden onset, cough and congestion of the bases of the lungs pointed to acute pneumonia of an influenzal or septic type, one of the local physicians stated that the intensely infectious character of the malady and the nature of the lung expectorations pointed to a pneumonia of a much more dangerous origin.

So anxious were the medical authorities regarding the seriousness of the outbreak, which some deem diagnosis, that Professor Sims Woodhead, of Cambridge; Dr. Bulstrode, medical officer to the Local Government Board, and Dr. L. Heath, the bacteriologist attached to the East Suffolk and Ipswich Hospital, were deputed to investigate into the mystery.

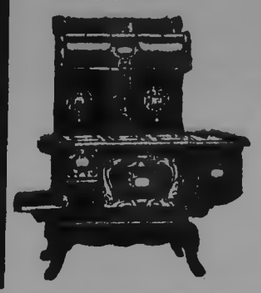
"Peerless Peninsular" is a big, honestly built range—full size—with all the new conveniences of the most expensive steel ranges—and with the durability of cast-iron which is superior to steel in lasting qualities.



"HARMONY", "CONSTANT" and "ADANAC" have the same quality, workmanship and construction as the "Peerless", the difference is only in the outer appearance.

HAVELOCK NEWS

Examiner Special.

Havelock, Oct. 19.—A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the Presbyterian Church on Wednesday at 1.30 p.m. ,when Miss Evelyn Maude, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Graham of town was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur Austin Gabriel, of Toronto. At the hour appointed the groom and groomsman, Mr. Roland Graham, took their places to await the arrival of the bride. As the wedding march played by Miss Edna Graeb of Toronto pealed forth, the bridesmaid entered the church, followed by the dainty little bride leaning on the arm of her father. As they slowly marched down the aisle to join the groom the choir sang "The Voice that Breathed o'er Eden". The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Skene of town, assisted by Rev. Mr. Camp of Sault Ste. Marie, former pastor of the church here. During the signing of the register Miss Eva McGee, niece of the bride, sang "Because"

The bride was attired in a handsome duchess satin trimmed with seed pearls and crystal trimming she wore the customary veil caught up with lilies of the valley and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid, Miss Lena Warren of Deseronto, was prettily attired in a cream silk voilene gown with black picture hat and carred a shower bouquet of pink roses. At the conclusion of the ceremony the bridal party, and guests numbering about twenty-five drove to the bride's home on Oak street. After the best wishes had been bestowed on the young couple they led the way to the diningroom where a sumptuous repast awaited them. The tables and room were decorated with masses of cut flowers which presented a picture of great beauty. The groom's gift to the bride was a necklace of pearls; to the bridesmaid a ring set with three whole pearls, to the organist a crescent of pearls. To the soloist a leather hand bag, to the groomsman a pair of cuff links, and to the two ushers, Mr. Harold Gracey of town and Mr. Brown of Toronto, pearl tie pins. The bride has many friends in town having resided here for many years, during which time she won the high esteem of all as was shown by the numerous and costly presents she received. Among them a silver tea service on silver tray from the congregation of the Presbyterian Church, where she ably filled the position of organist for many years past. A piano from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Graham and a substantial cheque from her brother, Mr. R. Graham, who resides at Peterborough.

The groom also was well known in town having spent about three years here and during that time making many warm friends. The young couple left on the 3.30 train amid a shower of confetti for Shelburne, the groom's home where they will spend a short time before returning to Toronto where they will reside. The bride travelled in a suit of navy blue broadcloth with hat of Copenhagen blue.

Following are the names of the guests :—

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Webb, Miss Edna Graeb, Mr. J. L. Buchanan, Mr. A. W. Brown and Mr. W. E. Graham of Toronto; Mrs. Gabriel of Shelburne; Rev. A. E. Camp, Sault Ste Marie; Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Woman's World

Mrs. Kate Williamson, a Woman Out For Congress.

MRS. KATE WILLIAMSON.

"Kate Williamson for congress!"

That is the battlecry of the women of Colorado.

Since it became known that Colorado because of its increase in population is entitled to another representative in the national house the women of that state have declared that one of their number shall be the new member.

The movement was launched in Denver, and the women did not have far to look for a candidate. Colorado is one of the few states that place men and women upon an equality in the matter of voting. Equal suffrage, according to the women, is doing the state a great amount of good. Incidentally it is bringing into prominence several women, some of whom are now holding elective offices. Colorado rolls up a large woman's vote, and the women are keenly alive to their opportunities. So when it became a matter of certainty that the state would soon be permitted to increase its congressional representation the clubwomen of the capital city got busy and finally decided to make a united effort to capture the office for one of their own sex.

And the choice has fallen on Katherine Williamson.

Mrs. Williamson is a woman of strong personality. Her age is—well, she looks to be about thirty-seven—certainly not more than forty years. She is of medium height, possesses a striking figure and pleasing features, and her eyes play a strong accompaniment to her expressed thoughts. She is a natural leader among women and has the happy faculty of making new friends as well as keeping the old. She has decided opinions of her own and fearlessly expresses them. At the same time she never permits herself to show anger because others cannot share her beliefs. Perhaps that is one of the reasons she has come into such prominence among the men and women of the state and placed her among the leaders in the women's clubs and caused politicians to seek her counsel on more than one occasion.

At a public discussion a short time ago Mrs. Williamson was asked by one of the male speakers why women persisted in trying to secure universal equal suffrage.

"In your own case, Mrs. Williamson," he said, "your presence certainly graces this platform, but I imagine you would look far more charming at home with your children around you and bending your talents toward those things that make for the ideal home."

Mrs. Williamson's answer has become famous.

"Sir," she said, "your remarks are like those of most men when they discuss a subject of which they know little or nothing. As you suggest, I will consider my own case. In the first place, I do not possess the home; in the second place, I haven't the children you mention, and, in the third place, I am a widow, and it would be decidedly improper to follow out further your suggestions."

Mrs. Williamson has lived in Colorado only a few years. Her husband died about eight years ago, and a short time after she went to Denver, where she has since resided. She holds the office of state factory inspector, and it is common knowledge that the duties of that office are being conscientiously and most successfully carried out. Her record in that office, her charming personality, her skill as a debater—all will add lustre to the enthusiastic campaign which she and her friends will wage to win for her the first woman's seat in the national house of representatives.

Champagne.

About 20 per cent of all the champagne that is made in France is lost by the ripening of the bottles. Only about 5 per cent of Spanish wines seem to lose at that rate.

Points For Mothers

Susanne and her mother seem to make their lives fit in to each other delightfully, says Dolly Madison in one of her talks. Suzanne is an only child, and her life would have been lonely if she had not had the happy partnership of her little mother. I asked the older lady one day if she had studied mothering as a fine art, but she laughed and said, "I love her." Yet I have known loving daughters who withdrew from their mothers and found their chums elsewhere. Perhaps it is because Suzanne's mother has still retained her youthfulness that she can enter into all of Susanne's interests. She is not youthful in looks, for many burdens of life have brought gray hairs and wrinkles, but her laugh is as gay and her enthusiasm as vivid as a girl's. All of Susanne's friends love the little mother. They take their joys and their sorrows to her, and they always include her when they call on Susanne. It is the case of "we're all girls together."

Many mothers make the mistake of the constant criticism which repels confidence. Susanne's mother never laughs at anything as "silly." She listens to all the little love chatter, to all the talks of boys, and gives it her serious consideration. She knows that Suzanne is going to talk about boys to somebody, and why not to her, who can tactfully guide her thoughts and life in the right direction? When Suzanne asks questions she does not evade. They have long, serious, beautiful conversations about the meanings of life. Susanne makes her decisions with her mother's help, and together they will plan and work out their problems. They go to places together because they enjoy it better that way. In Susanne's opinion there is no girl who can half equal her mother in the art of making other people have a good time. Try it yourselves, girls.

The New Baby.

The new baby is such an important member of any family that even if others do without necessaries baby is sure to be provided with every luxury. The demands of the baby are extraordinary.

Clothes are but one item. No matter how elaborate and dainty the marvelous layette may be, there are numberless accessories that every mother would find necessary for her new baby—little things that add to his comfort and to her own.

The folding bathtub of rubber is a joy to the mother as well as to her baby. After the bath it can be tucked away where it will be entirely unobtrusive.

There is nothing more necessary to a mother's peace of mind in these days of scientific methods in child rearing than to know her baby is gaining flesh. For this purpose she needs scales, and these scales should be dainty in appearance. With a basket attachment of white wicker, lined with white muslin over pale blue or pink, they are as comfortable as a cradle.

The play rug is one of the attractive novelties of nursery equipment. It is like a miniature toyshop all in one, with jungle pets and dollies sewed to it, so that there is no possibility of the baby chewing them up or pulling off useful parts of their anatomy.

The English perambulator is the most approved fashion in baby vehicles and for comfort surpasses all other styles of carriages.

The Ill Shod Child.

One of the great responsibilities of the mother of children is the task of keeping them properly shod. She must study the combination of fit, durability and looks, and of these the first is the most essential, and great blame is hers if she allows them, through mistaken notions of economy, to wear shoes that are too small. If a child outgrows a pair of shoes give them away. Don't make the child wear them because they are "perfectly good." As a matter of fact, they are "perfectly bad."

Sometimes a little chap doesn't know what is the matter, but whines and fusses apparently without cause. Look to his shoes. If they seem too short or too narrow discard them at once. Examine the feet often to see that the shoes are not being outgrown. Heed any complaint he may make that "they hurt." New shoes should be perfectly comfortable—just "as easy as an old shoe." Soles should be flexible; for a child, without heels. The first heels, as the child grows into them, should be low and broad. The toes should be broad, affording plenty of room.

A Mighty Task.

If any one began to count the corpuscles in the body of a man 160 pounds in weight, counting at the rate of 100 a minute, day and night, it would take 268,000 years to complete the task.

"I FEEL IT MY DUTY

To Give You a Statement In Regard To 'Fruit-a-tives'"

HARDWICKE, MIRAMICHI, N.B., Jan. 17th, 1910.

"I feel it my duty to give to you and the world an unsolicited statement in respect to the wonderful cure I received by taking 'Fruit-a-tives.' Chronic Constipation was the complaint I suffered with for years. My general health was miserable as a result of this disease, and I became depressed and alarmed. I was treated by physicians without the slightest permanent benefit, and I tried all kinds of pills and tablets but nothing did me any good.

I saw the strong testimonial in favor of 'Fruit-a-tives' by New Brunswick's 'Grand Old Man', the Hon. John Costigan, and I knew that anything he stated was honest and true and given only to help his fellow-men. I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and the effects were most marvellous, and now I am entirely well from all my Chronic Constipation that I suffered from for so many years. My general health is once more excellent and I cannot say too much to express my thanks for the great benefits derived from taking 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

A. G. WILLISTON.

"Fruit-a-tives" is not gotten up by druggists or expert chemists—who know nothing about disease and the needs of the human body—but is the scientific discovery of a well known physician, and is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices.

AN APPEAL TO REASON

TWELVE months ago, after prolonged investigation and experiment, we pinned our faith to the Knight motor as the greatest improvement of the decade in automobile construction.

Many believed us, bought cars and are to-day congratulating themselves on their judgment.

There were croakers then, perhaps there are to-day, but we bear less of them.

THEY SAID—The engine was an experiment—forgetting that it had stood the greatest engine test on record before the Royal Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland.

THEY SAID—It will not stand up on Canadian roads; although they knew a challenge of $1,250 was open to anyone who wished to measure his motor against the Knight for reliability.

THEY SAID—That it would not be taken up in Europe, and that the Daimler Company were about to discard it. We knew at the time—and anyone can verify it now—that the leading concerns of six of the countries of Europe have adopted the Knight motor.

THEY SAID—No one in the United States would take it up. We know that over twenty of the largest concerns in the United States have from time to time applied for consideration in the American rights. And we know to-day that leading United States firms will announce 1911 models with Knight motors in another twelve months despite the fact that the agents of some of these concerns profess great skepticism about the Knight motor to-day.

We seldom refer to or bother about the suggestions of interested opponents. We want, however, to repeat our conviction, formed a year ago, and confirmed by twelve months' of experience in the factory, on the road, and in the users' hands:

That the Knight motor far surpasses the old valve type, and that it is only a question of time before it entirely supersedes it in all high-grade cars. Get a car that will be up-to-date the longest.

Our 1911 model is out, but our 1910 users can smile, for their car is up to-date still. 1911 is only a refinement in details on 1910.

The same motor. The same body lines, with high front doors, now pretty universally copied.

Is not this the type of car to buy?

PANDORA RANGE

for Coal or Wood

THE Pandora Range is for those who desire to make a permanent investment. The high quality of the materials and the superior method of construction assure long life.

The Body of the Pandora is very heavy. The Rods and Bolts are on the outside where they cannot burn or rust out. The Expansion Rings of the cooking section provide ample allowance for extreme expansion and contraction and eliminate the possibility of the metal cracking.

The Cooking Top is Burnished which toughens the surface of the metal and increases its strength. McClary Oil Cement is used between the joints. Unlike cheap, ordinary cement, it will not dry out and need replacing. The Nickelling will not tarnish and is many times more durable than the single coat of nickel on ordinary ranges.

The Semi-Steel Fire Box Linings are twenty per cent. heavier than cast or gray iron linings. Sulphur fumes, so destructive to cast iron, cannot penetrate the hard, smooth as glass surface of Semi-Steel. The Grates have Three Faces, which allows the wear to be distributed on three sides, insuring triple durability.

If you want a range of guaranteed quality get the Pandora. It's built to give you lasting service.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

TAN.

Oh, I'm back from my vacation and I've had a humdum trip;
I've got hayseed in my hat-box and alfalfa in my grip;
I've got oats in my umbrella and corn-tassels on my cane;
I've got honey in my eyebrows and fried chicken on the brain;
I've got sorghum down my shirt-front and my shoes are full of bran.
But the emblem I'm most proud of is my coat of golden tan.

'Twas one morning in the wheat-field Mother Nature took her brush,
Ran it lightly o'er my features, and behold I wore a blush;
Next she turned my nose to crimson, then the bald spot on my head;
Then she daubed on pigment freely till my face was turkey red;
Ah, but when she'd finished painting and the peeling part began,
Then I wasn't so enamored with the thought of wearing tan.

But in time the crimson faded, like the blighting of a rose;
Darker grew my blazing bald spot, darker grew my blistered nose;
Each day old Mother Nature quietly plied her mystic brush
Till there came a rich brown tinting to supplant my brazen blush;
Ah, the pride that rose within me, how it thrilled my inner man,
When I knew I was possessor of a full-fledged coat of tan.

You can hymn about your freckles, but your lyric makes me smile;
For my nut-brown coat of lacquer beats your "beauty-spots" a mile.
Why, man, tan is to your freckle what a tree is to a leaf,
What a field of waving grain is to one isolated sheaf;
Oh, I'm filled with deep compassion for the merely "speckled" man;
That's the way I look at freckles from the vantage of my tan.

—J. Edward Hungerford in Collier's.

A Novel Bonnet.

The "two-storey hat" is the latest creation in French millinery.

Parisian genius designed it for three things. First, because of picturesqueness and prettiness; second as a boon to theatregoers, and third, as a means of changing the fashions in enormous puffed up masses of hair, real and false, into a normal fashion of wearing one's own locks.

Out of these three desires came the fascinating double-decker, or two-storey hat!

Madame or mademoiselle is going to the theatre. She arrives at the theatre. She has on a ravishing hat, a confection of feathers, maline and velvet. Will she take it off, wonder all those about her divided between admiration and anxiety. They note a dainty little fringe of lace, with delicate roses embroidered on it, and a gleam of jewel or sheen of pearl here and there. It seems to be an accessory to the interior of the hat brim.

Madame or mademoiselle reaches up, pulls out a few pins, and, hey—presto! The big hat is on her lap. The delicate, dainty lace that seemed to be a part of it rests on her head still. It is the edge of a cap, lace or silk shot with gold or silver thread, and holding her coiffure in place.

FOR THE COOK.

Fruit Punch.

Boil four cupfuls of water and two cupfuls of sugar together until they form a syrup. Soak a dozen or more sprigs of mint in one and a half cupfuls of boiling water for ten minutes. Then strain and add the water to the syrup. Stir in a cupful of strawberry juice—juice from canned strawberries will do it if they are not in season—a cupful of orange juice and the juice of ten or more lemons. Cool and pour into a punch bowl with a pint of grape juice. Chill with a large square of ice and dilute if desired with charged water. Garnish with mint leaves and any other convenient fruit, pineapple, cherries, etc.

Cabbage in a Loaf.

Scoop out the crumbs from a square loaf of bread, leaving only the four walls. Leave in the oven until crisp and fill with the following mixture: Take off the large outside leaves from a small head of cabbage, remove the stalk and soak in water for about ten minutes, drain and cook in boiling salted water with a teaspoonful of soda until tender, cut into small pieces, season with salt and pepper and put a layer of the cabbage into the loaf with small pieces of butter over it. Add a layer of bread crumbs and grated cheese. Let stand in the oven until the cheese has melted, and serve very hot.

Tomato Jelly.

Strain the juice from a number of stewed tomatoes and cook over the fire for a quarter of an hour with a bay leaf and sliced onion. To a pint of the juice add a teaspoonful of gelatine previously softened in a little cold water. Stir the juice until the gelatine is dissolved, take from the fire and strain after seasoning well with salt, cayenne and a dash of celery salt. Pour into a mould and put in a cold place until the jelly is firm. This may be served on lettuce with mayonnaise, or it may be used as a garnish for cold meats, in which latter case the jelly need not be poured into a mould but into a large shallow dish.

Pineapple Cream.

Beat the yolks of three eggs slightly, add the juice and grated rind of one lemon, a pinch of salt and half a cupful of sugar. Let simmer on the fire slowly, stirring all the time until it thickens. Then remove and stir in a cupful of canned pineapple grated fine and one and a half tablespoonfuls of gelatine which has been previously soaked in half a cupful of cold water. When the mixture begins to jell stir in half a cupful of cream beaten to a froth and the whites of the three eggs also beaten still. Turn into a mould and chill thoroughly until time to serve.

Fruit Glace.

Make a syrup by boiling together for half an hour one cup of granulated sugar and one cup of boiling water. Never stir the syrup and let the boiling be merely a simmering. It may be tested by dipping a spoon or fork into the syrup and then into cold water. When the mixture is brittle the syrup is done. When done set the saucepan in another pan of hot water. The fruit, whatever is in season, grapes, pared and quartered peaches or pears, plums, oranges, grape fruit, lemons, etc., should be stuck on the end of a skewer or a long needle. Dip it into the syrup and lay it on a buttered dish. Nuts may be candied in the same way.

Cucumber Soup.

Mince five or six large peeled cucumbers and soak in salted water for half an hour. Drain and add a tablespoon of minced onion. Put into a saucepan with three teacupfuls of white stock and let boil for about fifteen minutes or until the cucumbers are soft enough to be pressed through a sieve. While the cucumbers are cooking soak two tablespoonfuls of granulated tapioca in a cup of cold water, add this to the soup with a cup of unskimmed milk. Stir until thick and serve immediately, sprinkling each plate with minced parsley.

Laugh at the follies of youth, scorn the counsel of the wise, and heed not the advice of your elders, but as surely as the sun sinks beneath the sea, just so surely there comes a day of reckoning.

If you wish to cultivate a gossiping, meddling, censorious spirit in your children, be sure, when they come home from church, a visitor or any place to which you do not accompany them to ply them with questions concerning what everybody wore, how everybody said and did; and if you find anything in all this to censure always do it in their hearing. You may rest assured if you pursue a course of this kind, they will not return to you unladen with intelligence; and, rather than it should be uninteresting, they will by degrees learn to embellish in such a manner as shall not fail to call forth remarks and expressions of wonder from you. You will by this course render a spirit of curiosity—which is early visible in children and which, if rightly directed may be made the instrument of enriching and enlarging their minds—a vehicle of mischief which shall serve only to narrow them.

THE POPULAR IDEA OF MARRIAGE

It is certain that the society man of to-day marries a woman who makes his home a restful place from which he is seldom tempted to wander. Why should he? The sunniest, brightest room in the house is his sanctum; here are his favourite books, pictures he likes, the latest magazines with leaves cut and no end of pipes. When the train whistles into the depot, in which is this fortunate man, a fire is started on the low hearth to make the room cheerful, although the warmth is not needed. To this room he brings his friends and here husband and wife sit when alone. Everything that will help the wife to make a home a means of grace she reads, on her table are always to be found books and magazines that talk of the higher life of the home. We mean good cooking when we say higher life, a hitherto much neglected part of religion. This man, formerly out every evening, rarely goes to the theatre or opera, or ball, because his home has greater attraction and he is really now so sensible, well-informed, and amounting to something that his friends are rejoiced that the seemingly incongruous marriage came about.

EARLY TRAINING

It is woman's duty to look well to the ways of her household. To do this she must have a sound mind in a sound body. She must be trained and educated from infancy with this aim constantly before her. Her mother should go to her play house and teach her how to arrange it nicely. Get her a trunk and see that she keeps her things well arranged in it. Give her a place for her playthings. Then see that others do not molest them. When she is older, give her a room to keep tidy. Also have her to help do any and every kind of housework. Tell her of your aim. Explain that it is all for her own good in the future. When she is twelve, go visiting and let her see how much there is to do, and how well she can manage it.

Some girls are discouraged after marriage to find so much more to do than they anticipated. Worse still to find themselves so ignorant how to do. Explain that there is real pleasure in doing most any kind of work after we learn how. That after she is married, she will neither have time to learn nor have a teacher. That she must have pride of character, self-control, self-reliance, and self-denial. That she must be cleanly, orderly, energetic and persevering. Reaching her aim depends on her own efforts. That she must make herself do the right thing at the right time in the right way.

Urge her to take care of her health to be in bed at 9. To be temperate in all things. To cultivate and practice good morals and gentle manners for the sake of her influence on others. To practise eating, walking, talking, etc, at home as though she were abroad. Because practice makes perfect, and because repetition forms habits and habits are second nature.

In short, see that she marshals all her forces to reach her aim. When it can be truly said of her that she is useful as well as ornamental, and that she has a good practical, all-round education, her mother has looked well to the ways of the of her household. Our opinion is that all this cannot be accomplished in less than twenty years. That a girl is not capable of looking well to the ways of her house-hold younger than this.

At twenty this girl is now capable of making her own choice. If her husband takes a wrong view or wrong aim she can restore him into right by gentle, patient perseverance. She will reign queen of the home and her home will be a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Watrous

The geographical centre of the great and growing Canadian West—The centre of the finest farming section in all Saskatchewan—The most attractive town of this new Golden Empire—The Central Divisional Point of the Great Western Provinces on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—In direct line between Regina and Prince Albert, and will be on the line of railway when built between these two cities—The terminus of the branch line of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Prince Albert. :: :: :: ::

HOW MANY LOTS IN WATROUS DO YOU WANT?

Are YOU going to purchase some lots in Watrous and take advantage of the big increase in value which is practically sure to take place in this live and growing city in the next two or three years? Or are you going to procrastinate—hesitate—put off the matter until later on?

The money YOU make in Watrous will be through the ownership of lots you ACTUALLY PURCHASE, and not on the lots which you INTEND TO PURCHASE. Remember, "He who hesitates works for the other fellow."

Later on, when Watrous is one of the important and rapidly growing cities of Western Canada, and real estate which is close in commands high and constantly increasing prices will YOU then be pointed out as one of those who took advantage of a live opportunity, or will you be one of those who lamefit their condition and discuss what "might have been"?

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these—it might have been."

Will the opportunity now presented in a couple of years when lots in Watrous command high prices, be to you like "water that has passed over the mill dam"?

You cannot make a mistake if you buy lots in Watrous. It is a Central Divisonal Point on a great Transcontinental line of railway, surrounded by rich agricultural territory and located near the banks of Little Manitou Lake, which will bring tourists by the thousand to Watrous to avail themselves of the benefits afforded by this wonderful medicinal water.

Being a Divisional Point on a great line of railway is usually alone sufficient to make a city of considerable importance, but Watrous, on account of its natural advantages and strategic position, would be an important inland city, even if it were not a Divisional Point.

An investment of real estate in Watrous offers a splendid opportunity for large and certain profits. And no line of investment during the last few years has been so safe and shown greater returns than an investment in lots in the rapidly growing cities of Western Canada.

History DOES repeat itself, and it is usually safe to judge the future by the past. Therefore, it will be well for you to ponder over this fact: The C. P. R. was the first of the great Transcontinental lines of railway.

Suppose you had purchased a few years ago lots close in at $100 in any of the Western Divisional Points on the C. P. R., your investment would have been safe and certain right from the start, and it would have been constantly and rapidly increasing in value.

Note the Divisional Points on the main line of the C. P. R. running west from Winnipeg, Brandon, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Revelstoke. If you had purchased lots in any or all of these Divisional Points when conditions were similar to those in Watrous to-day—when these young cities were about two years old, had a population of 1,500, and choice inside lots could be purchased at $100 each—there could be no doubt about the wisdom of your investment, which would likely be worth to-day not less than $10 for each dollar you invested. This opportunity, however, was presented a few years ago, but is now a thing of the past.

You now have the same opportunity in Watrous that was presented in these Divisional Point cities on the C. P. R. The Grand Trunk Pacific is the latest and destined to become the greatest of all the Transcontinental lines. Traversing as it does a great and rich territory, there can be no doubt that the Divisional points on the G. T. P., will in a few years be cities of equal size and importance with those on the C. P. R.

But let us carry this comparison a little further. Of the Great Western Provinces, Moose Jaw is the Central Division on the C. P. R., while Watrous is the Central Divisional Point on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Moose Jaw is now a city of 16,000 population and growing rapidly. It is but a few years since Moose Jaw was no larger than Watrous is to-day, and choice lots, close in, could have been purchased for $100 each. However, lots which sold in Moose Jaw a few years ago at $100 are to-day worth from $1,000 to $3,000, and they are advancing in price rapidly, just as the price of lots is advancing in practically all of the Western Canadian Cities.

You can buy lots to-day in Watrous, close in, splendidly located, for $100, and in five years these lots in Watrous should be worth at least as much as the same kind of lots in Moose Jaw to-day.

The "Ten Thousand Club" of Watrous is made up of the leading business men, and it is their ambition for Watrous to have 10,000 population by 1914. With a population of 10,000 in Watrous, lots which we are offering to-day for $100, will easily be worth $1,000.

$100,000,000 WAS MADE LAST YEAR

By Those Who Own Property in the Live and Growing Cities of Western Canada

WHAT PORTION OF THIS DID YOU MAKE?

From the most accurate figures obtainable, it is found that the assessed valuation of real estate in the live and growing cities of Western Canada last year increased more than $100,000,000. That does not include improvements, but the actual increase in value of real estate in these cities. The Winnipeg Free Press securing its figures from "records which have been gathered directly from original sources," finds that in eight Western Canadian cities the increase in real estate values of land alone, and not improvements, for the past five years has averaged 562 per cent., or an average annual increase of 112 per cent for each of these cities during the past five years.

What Do These Figures Indicate? They indicate that an investment in the live and growing cities of Western Canada is as safe and sure as anything can be, and that your investment is almost certain to make you 100 per cent. profit each year.

What Does This Mean To You? It means nothing unless you participate in the profits, and you can do this only by buying real estate in these young and vigorous Western Canadian cities. The time to buy is when a new city has passed through the "seasoning" stage—when it is in the formative period—when its natural resources and strategical position assure the building of a big city, along broad lines.

Watrous has all the natural advantages that any new city could wish, and, in addition, is destined to be one of the most popular health resorts in America.

Little Manitou Lake---'The Carlsbad of Canada'

THE WINNIPEG TELEGRAM, speaking editorially of Watrous and its wonderful mineral lake, has the following:

"Little Lake Manitou, on the G. T. P., is beginning to receive the attention to which the wonderful medicinal properties of the lake so well entitle it. The Indians called the lake Manitou, which means 'good spirit,' owing to the healing qualities they found the waters possessed. It is said that Indians came to this lake from hundreds of miles round, and on the shores are still to be seen circles of stones, which mark Indian encampments. Though it is probable that the Indians for years have availed themselves of the curative powers of the waters of this lake, it was not until the building of the G. T. P. had caused the town of Watrous to spring into being two years ago that the remarkable medicinal value of the waters of the lake began to be generally realized.

"The power of these waters to cure rheumatism, eczema and skin diseases has been so positively and strikingly demonstrated as to attract considerable interest. Those who visit the lake are unanimous in declaring Little Manitou Lake as the coming Carlsbad of Canada. A chemical analysis of the waters of Little Lake Manitou shows considerable resemblance to the medicinal waters of the world famous Carlsbad, which has for so long maintained the highest reputation. The beneficial results obtained from bathing in Little Lake Manitou are so positive that the good effect is beyond doubt.

What the Hon. Wm. Pugsley Says:

"Hon. William Pugsley, Minister of Public Works for the Dominion of Canada, hearing of the fame of the lake, paid it a visit and bathed in its waters. The honourable gentleman, when interviewed at Watrous by one of our reporters stated: 'I am not an authority on the medicinal properties of water, but this I can say, Bathing in Little Lake Manitou is particularly pleasant; there is a property about the water that imparts a pleasant glow. I am somewhat troubled with rheumatism, and I am quite certain bathing in Little Lake Manitou has been very beneficial to me.'

"'I consider Watrous has a good future; the lake is a valuable asset to Saskatchewan and it will become a resort patronized not only by many from all parts of this country, but also from points in the United States. I have visited health resorts in California and England. Little Lake Manitou is unique.

"'Yes, it is true we bought four lots on the shores of Little Lake Manitou; my brother (Dr. P. A. Pugsley) intends to take treatment here for rheumatism from which he suffers.'

Where Anyone Can Swim.

"The specific gravity of the water of Little Manitou Lake is 1.05. This is 34 heavier than the waters of Carlsbad. The human body cannot sink in water of this specific gravity. People who elsewhere have given up all hope of swimming find it easy to swim in Lake Manitou."—From the Winnipeg Telegram, July 30, 1910

Buy Lots in Watrous and Make Money

The more lots you buy in Watrous, the more money you will make. It is impossible to purchase lots in a growing young city of Western Canada and not make splendid and certain profits.

Lots in Moose Jaw that sold few years ago at $100 each are to-day worth from $1,000 to $3,000.

Lethbridge a few years ago was a small frontier town. Lots in Lethbridge now command fancy prices; $10,000 to $12,000 is sometimes paid for a single lot.

Lots which sold in Saskatoon ten years ago for $100 are to-day worth ten to fifty times that amount.

You could have purchased lots in Edmonton ten years ago for $100, which are to-day worth $1,000 to $10,000.

Those who purchased lots in Edmonton ten years ago are now possessors of property worth 1,000 per cent. more than the price at which it was originally purchased—an average increase in value of 100 per cent. each year.

In Fort William the same rapid advance in values has taken place. Lots which sold at $100 to $200, even five years ago, have since sold for $1,000 to $2,000.

It is almost impossible to chronicle the rapid advance in property in Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities of Western Canada.

Buy lots in Watrous now while they are selling at the ground floor prices, and hold them, and you are certain to make money. Buy half a dozen or more lots and ride with the wave of advancing values; $10 for every dollar you invest is common in live towns of Western Canada.

Think what it means for the population of Canada to increase from six millions to thirty millions, and 80 per cent of this growth will be in the West. There is no use living in a day of land and opportunity unless you are part of it. You doubtless have among your friends and acquaintances those who have shown their faith in Canada and the Canadian cities, and have become rich because they invested when these cities were young.

Buy lots and prosper with Canada. Buy in Watrous, and as Watrous grows the money you put into it will grow just as surely and certainly. Invest your money where the greatest activity is taking place, in the centre of rapid growth, where the greatest advances are realized. This centre is undoubtedly in Western Canada, and Watrous is the pivotal point. You are taking no chances when you buy lots in Watrous at present prices. The future of Watrous is assured.

TWO SONS OF PICTOU.

Political Leaders' Right Hand Men Were Schoolboys Together.

The people of Pictou, Nova Scotia, followed the progress of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and party through the West, and of Mr. R. L. Borden and party through the Maritime Provinces. For both of the candidates who strove to secure the representation of Pictou at the last general federal election have had the honor of being selected by their respective leaders to accompany them throughout their tours. And both men are capable politicians and clever speakers. They are not well-known outside of their own province, but it is pretty certain that some day they will be. The name of Mr. E. M. Macdonald, M.P., has been several times mentioned on the floor of the House of Commons as the natural successor to the first Cabinet vacancy from Nova Scotia, while during the last general election it was repeatedly stated that in the event of Mr. Borden meeting with success at the polls, Mr. Charles E. Tanner would be his Ministerial colleague from Nova Scotia. It will be recalled that Mr. Tanner, who was leader of the provincial Conservative opposition, resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the nomination for the House of Commons against Mr. Macdonald, but was defeated by a majority of 300, and when he attempted at the bye-election to recover his seat in the Legislature he lost by 152 votes. The prestige gained by the Liberals at the federal general election, of course, contributed considerably towards his defeat upon the last occasion; but his party has not lost faith in him by any means, and he is again offering himself as a candidate at the approaching provincial elections. Both Mr. Tanner and Mr. Macdonald were born in the town of Pictou, the former in 1867, the latter in 1865. Both attended the historical old Pictou Academy, the alma mater of Joseph Howe, the late Sir William Dawson, and many other distinguished Nova Scotians. Mr. Macdonald, however, following his course at the Academy by one at Dalhousie College Mr. Tanner was called to the Bar of Nova Scotia in 1878 and appointed a Q.C. in 1895. He was first returned to the Legislative Assembly at the general election of 1894, was defeated at the election of 1897 and elected again in 1901, retaining the seat until he resigned on the eve of the federal elections in 1908. He was elected leader of the opposition in 1901, and was always able to make the sessions interesting for the Government in spite of their snug majorities. He is a forceful and aggressive speaker and possessed of considerable personal magnetism. In the old days he was a skilled athlete, being one of the fastest runners and best cricketers Nova Scotia ever produced.

Mr. Macdonald, who has been a King's Counsel since 1904, has one of the largest legal practices in the Maritime Provinces, one of his principal clients being the Dominion Coal Co., which it will be remembered, he represented as counsel in the Steel-Coal suit. One of his closest personal friends is Mr. James Ross of Montreal. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislative Assembly in 1894 and for the House of Commons in 1896 and 1900, being defeated upon the last two occasions by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. He succeeded in securing election to the assembly in 1897, 1900 and 1901, resigning in 1904 to again contest the seat for the House of Commons against Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. This time he was successful, and he has held the seat ever since. Mr. Macdonald is at times quite a picturesque speaker, but his strong point in debate or on the platform is his capacity for marshalling his facts well and presenting his arguments in clear, concise English. It is well known at Ottawa that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is personally very fond of his supporter from Pictou, just as is Mr. Borden of Mr. Tanner.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Macedonians in Canada.

The Macedonians in Toronto, who number nearly 2,000, illustrate the different nationalities which, in Canada as well as in the native land, are a continual source of trouble. Macedonia is a part of the Turkish Empire. From the very beginning of its history, it has been troubled by race strife. One of the chief accomplishments of Philip, father of Alexander the Great, was to bring about at least a temporary unity, which enabled him and his son to devote their attention to outside conquests.

From the time of the Roman occupation, however, down to the present Turkish rule, the history of Macedonia has been a story of disorder. The natural result has been a strong desire among many of the people to emigrate. Toronto has received more than any other Canadian city.

There are not many women, however, in the Canadian colony, for the Turkish regulations make it difficult to bring out a family. A walk down Eastern avenue, Toronto, therefore, is not nearly as interesting as a trip through the "Ward." In the latter district, the streets are full of women and children dressed in strange garb and occupied in strange work.

The Macedonian settlement, however, is comparatively deserted. Hardly a person is in the streets during the day, and at night there are only a few men sitting on the doorsteps. Here and there is a woman, with, perhaps, one or two children, but they are exceptions.

Wrecks Come His Way.

In the New Brunswick general elections of 1903 the late George V. McInerney ran on the Opposition ticket in St. John city, and Mr. Edward Lantalum, a well-known junk dealer, opposed him.

At the nomination proceedings, Mr. McInerney brought down the house by referring to Mr. Lantalum as a "good fellow, but always around where there is a wreck."

Mr. Lantalum, however, had his revenge, for he was elected over his opponent, and on declaration day he referred to Mr. McInerney's statement and said:

"And just a week ago to-day I was present at the wreck of Mr. McInerney and the rest of his ticket."

black uncurtained window. Every time I looked up it seemed to become once more the frame for a white, evil face. At last I could bear it no longer. I rose and left the house. I wandered capless across the marshes to where the wet seaweed lay strewn about, and the long waves came rolling shorewards; a wilderness now indeed of grey mists, of dark silent tongues of sea-water cleaving the land. There was no wind—no other sound than the steadfast monotonous lapping of the waves upon the sands. Along that road he had come; the faintly burning light upon my table showed where he had pressed his face against the window. Then he had wandered on, past the storm-bent tree at the turn of the road pointing landwards. A few yards farther was the creek from which he had dragged him. The events of the night struggled to reconstruct themselves in my mind, and I fought against their slow coalescence. I did not wish to remember—to believe. In my heart I felt that for some hidden reason Ray was my friend. This visit of the Duke's, with whatever it might portend, was without doubt inspired by him. And, on the other hand, there was the warning of Lady Angela, so earnestly expressed, so solemn, almost sad. How could I see light through all these things? How could I hope to understand?

The Duke came punctually, spruce and debonnair, a small rose in his buttonhole, his wizened cheeks aglow with the smart of the stinging east wind. With him came Lord Chelsford, whose face and figure were familiar enough to me from the pages of the illustrated papers. Dark, spare and tall, he spoke seldom, but I felt all the while the merciless investigation of his searching eyes. The Duke, on the other hand, seemed to have thrown aside some part of his customary reserve. He spoke at greater length and with more freedom than I had heard him.

CAUSE AND CURE OF RHEUMATISM

Due to Impurities in the Blood Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

The most noticeable and immediate result of rheumatism is a marked thinning of the blood, and in no disease does it develop more rapidly. Not only does the blood become weak but it is soon filled with impurities, which the different organs of the body have been unable to throw off. One of the most harmful of these impurities is uric acid, which is formed from the waste products of the body. In health it is easily passed off by the kidneys with the help of oxygen from the red corpuscles of the blood. Without oxygen the kidneys are unable to rid the system of this acid and it is retained in the blood and distributed to all parts of the body. The weak backs, pains across the kidneys, and thin scanty, highly coloured secretions, which follow, show that the acid is already in the blood and often leads the sufferer to think he has kidney trouble. If the disease is not driven out of the blood, rheumatism can never be cured, and the sufferer will always be subject to attacks, whenever exposed to damp or cold. With each returning attack the pain becomes more severe and complications often arise making necessary the use of habit forming drugs to relieve pain.

It is readily seen that the only way to cure rheumatism, is through the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills afford such a treatment as they contain all the elements necessary to build up and purify the blood. They increase its oxygen carrying capacity enabling the kidneys to pass the uric acid from the body and the other organs to do their work. Thus rheumatism is reached at its root and permanently cured. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are absolutely free from all habit-forming drugs, and are not an experiment as the following case will show:—Mr. W. Studley Lewis, Pilot Mound, Man., says: "I am a firm believer in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and always keep some by me in case of need. A few years ago while teaching school I suffered so much with rheumatism in my arms and shoulders that I had the greatest difficulty in writing on the blackboard, and after trying a number of remedies without benefit I was almost in despair, and felt inclined to abandon teaching. But one day I happened to pick up one of Dr. Williams 'almanacs, and read of the cure of a number of severe cases of rheumatism through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. This decided me to give the Pills a trial, and I had only taken them a few weeks when I felt much better. In the course of a few weeks more the pains and stiffness had all left me, and I had no more difficulty in doing my work. I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for they and they alone cured me of rheumatism."

A Delightful Hair Dressing That Makes Hair Grow

Favourite With Men and Women the Country Over

There is a reason for the phenomenal sale of Parisian Sage in the Dominion since it was first introduced into Canada.

And the reason is plain to all: Parisian Sage does just what it is advertised to do.

Ask Wm. Madill about it. He will tell you that he rigidly guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair or itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

There is no reason whatever why any man or woman should fail to take advantage of the above generous offer.

But one thing that has made Parisian Sage so famous is its peculiar power to turn the harsh, unattractive hair that many women possess into luxuriant and radiant hair in a short time. Women of refinement the country over are using it and it never disappoints.

"I procured Parisian Sage and found that it was a great hair tonic and cleanser. I have used other preparations but Parisian Sage Cleaned the scalp, stopped all irritation, made my hair fluffy, silky, and left no trace of stickiness as some other hair tonics had." Mrs. Sarah Sanderhoff, 1003 N. Washington St., Owosso, Mich., June 22, 1909.

girl with the auburn hair is on every where and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill for 50c. a large bottle. The girly with the auburn hair is on every package; mail orders filled, charges prepaid, by the Canadian makers, Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont.

"I find Parisian Sage a good hair remedy. My brother has also used Parisian Sage and says it is fine."—Yours sincerely, Julia Corbin, Huntingdon, Pa., Oct. 20th, 1909.

APPLES FOR EXHIBITION

From Farm and Dairy.

A car load of apples of assorted varieties were purchased from Mr. J. C. Harris at Ingersoll by Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, on behalf of the Dominion Government to be placed with the Canadian Exhibit at the Festival of Empire Exhibition to be held in London, England during the summer of 1911. The apples will be forwarded to Montreal shortly after being picked and placed in cold storage for the winter. According to the Dairy Commissioner, Mr. Harris' orchards are the best object lessons in the care of orchards he has ever seen.

The first shipment of peaches made by the Dominion Government to the English market has been sold at a price varying from four shillings to six shillings a case. The freight, commission and charges at the market end will be about 25 cents a case, giving a handsome net return of 70 cents to $1.20 for about six pounds of fruit, f.o.b. cars at St. Catharines. This shipment was undertaken by the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch, to settle a disputed point as to whether or not it is possible to put Canadian peaches on the English market in good condition. If future shipments prove as satisfactory as the first one, it will not only be possible but very profitable to make use of the British market for Canadian fruit.

Orchardists should examine their trees frequently and be sure that they are free from insects and fungus pests. When such are found, specimens should be sent to Dr. Hewitt, Dominion Entomologist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, for identification and means of controlling them. Specimens of insects, if dead, should be wrapped in paper or cotton and enclosed in a pasteboard box. If the specimen is particularly soft it should be packed in cotton saturated in alcohol. Whenever possible, grubs, caterpillars and so forth, should be packed alive in a box together with a supply of their food; air-holes are not necessary. Particulars as to where the insect was found and the nature of the damage which it is doing whether to leaves, buds or stems are frequently of great importance.

PITY THE BABIES.

All babies whose mothers do not know about Dr. Chase's Ointment are truly to be pitied. They are sure to have skin troubles of one kind or another, such as chafing, skin irritation, scald head, milk rash or baby eczema and nothing can bring them comfort so quickly as Dr. Chase's Ointment. It stops itching promptly and heals the skin beautifully.

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY OCTOBER 22 1910

DR. CRIPPEN CONVICTED THIS MORNING OF MURDERING HIS WIFE

FAMOUS PRISONER IS SENTENCED TO DEATH BY LORD JUSTICE ALVERSTONE

Took the Verdict with Composure but Lost His Confidence Afterwards and Was Led Away to His Cell in a Stupor.

TO HANG ON NOV. 14th

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 22.—After an impassioned and convincing address this morning by Crown Prosecutor Muir, followed by a charge from Lord Alverstone, quite favourable to the prosecutor, the Jury in the Crippen case retired, and within twenty minutes brought in a verdict condemning Crippen as guilty of his wife's (Belle Elmore's) death. Sentence was pronounced immediately. The verdict of the jury caused a profound sensation in the court, as after the address of the Chief Justice, it was quite expected that there would be a disagreement or acquittal.

Crippen seemed fully composed when he heard the verdict. He had evidently steeled himself for the worst and the fact that Miss Leneve was not with him helped to maintain his sangfroid. When the jury filed in after their short session in the private room, Lord Alverstone warned everybody to maintain absolute silence, and there wasn't a sound except the rolling of traffic on the busy street below. The silence was really oppressive.

Lord Alverstone immediately donned the black cap and passed sentence of death the only possible course under the circumstances. It may be commuted to imprisonment for life on an appeal to the Secretary, but this is hardly likely after Lord Alverstone's remarks. These were largely in the nature of instructions on law. He mentioned the saving clause of reasonable doubt, but showed that he was inclined against the prisoner on the evidence.

Crippen is to be hanged on Nov. 14.

"I still maintain my innocence," said Crippen before the sentence was passed.

Lord Alverstone said there could be no doubt in any reasonable mind that he cruelly poisoned his wife and dismembered the body. "I would implore you," said the Judge, "to make your peace with God. You have little hope of escaping the gallows."

By the time all the formal proceedings, the signing of the death warrant and so on were over, Crippen had lost his cockiness and was led out to the famous and ancient condemned cell in Brixton Jail as if in a stupor.

Miss Leneve's trial commences Tuesday.

ALL SAINTS' CONGREGATION HAS NOW A HANDSOME EDIFICE

Will Worship for the First Time in the New Building To-morrow---Is Built of Grey Stone and Has Very Attractive Appearance--Will Seat About Seven Hundred

New All Saints' church will be opened to-morrow. The new edifice is a handsome one. It is built in handsome architecture, of grey stone. When the church is opened to-morrow it will not have reached the point of completion that it will ultimately obtain. The tower will yet be built up twenty feet higher, and at the west end of the church, the structure has only been built of wood, in order that at some future time, a new sanctuary can be constructed. The new church will at the present time seat between six and seven hundred people, but with the extension of the building in the shape of a new sanctuary, it is estimated there will be seating capacity for one thousand. This morning workmen were engaged in getting the church ready for to-morrow, and when the time arrives everything will look bright and attractive. In addition to the numerous gifts that had been donated to the church, while in the old building, two beautiful gifts have been given to the new edifice. Mr. James Edgar gave a quarter cut oak communion table, Mrs. T. H. Fitzgerald (Charlotte street, gave a window depicting our Lord's sermon on the Mount.

At the opening services to-morrow, His Lordship, Rt. Rev. Bishop Sweeney, of the Diocese of Toronto, will be the special preacher.

FREE TEST OF HOBBERLIN SUITINGS AT LeBRUN'S

Every man who can possibly do so should attend the "free tests" of Hobberlin suitings and overcoatings, now in full swing at the store of LeBrun. The machine used for this purpose is the same as that used by the British government in testing the cloth for the army. The big tailoring house of Hobberlin makes use of it in buying their clothes from the mills. This store has secured the machine in order to give the men of this city an idea of the textile strength of the clothes he is selling in the suitings and overcoatings for this fall. It is a splendid way of determining exactly the strength of the materials you are buying. An opportunity of this kind is decidedly rare and all who can possibly do so should visit the store while the "free tests" are in progress.

GREATEST MEDICINE ON EARTH

A prominent citizen of Evansville, Ind., writes:—"I was ill for five months with a pulmonary trouble, and had the best of doctors;—I had hemorrhages and was in a very bad way. Through the advice of a friend I tried Vinol, and I feel that is saved my life. It is all you recommend it to be. I believe it is the greatest medicine on earth. I have advised others to try Vinol. I have advised others to try Vinol, and they have had the same results." (Name furnished on request.)

We want everyone in this vicinity who is troubled with chronic colds—coughs — or pulmonary troubles—to come to our store and get a bottle of Vinol.

AMOUNT OF CONTRACT FOR NEW WATERWORKS DAM HAS BEEN EXCEEDED BY $20,000

Water Commissioners Ask City to Issue Debentures for the Above Sum. Mr. W. H. Moore, K. C., Waited on the Finance Committee Last Evening. No Action Taken.

At the meeting of the Finance committee of the City Council last evening Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., of the Water Commissioners, was present and asked permission for the Water Commissioners to issue debentures for $20,000 to meet the extra expense over and above the estimates for the water works dam, pumping house and equipment. The ratepayers voted $120,000 for this work, which ultimately cost $140,000.

Without going into detailed figures, Mr. Moore explained that an unlooked for expenditure of $80,000 was entailed in reaching rock bottom in the river. This work was done at a pro rata price of the contract, to the loss of the contractor. The remaining $12,000 in excess of estimating was mainly incurred in purchasing the Irwin and McCauley property to assure no possible protest against raising the water to a maximum head, and in constructing heavier and wider piers than originally provided for, together with wheel pits, in anticipation of the city developing its own power.

The committee, generally, endorsed this additional expenditure as being in the city's best interests, but could not approve of the policy of appropriating the additional funds equired without going to payers.

Ald. Bradburn asked Mr. Moore why the Commissioners, when they found that $120,000 was not sufficient for the work, why did they not go to the people for the $20,000 extra, that was required, and not put the onus of issuing debentures for that amount on the City Council.

Ald. Hicks also questioned the procedure of asking the ratepayers for $120,000 and spending $20,000 more without their sanction. He specially emphasized the fact that the additional $8,000 expended in the river bed should have been foreseen by Engineer Kennedy, and was curious to know of one instance in which this engineer had ever kept the construction of any work within his estimate.

Mr. Moore contended that under the city's act the commissioners were empowered to spend $10,000 a year in extensions, and instead of issuing debentures for $20,000 to meet the overdraft for the construction of the water works dam, etc., they had used $20,000 of the surplus contingent fund, thus effecting a saving in interest. They now want this money for contingent expenses, hence their request for permission to issue debentures.

Ald. Bradburn was anxious to know when the people were to get any benefit from the water works if there was no limit to the issuing of debentures.

Mr. Moore replied that in one year from now there would be an appreciable lowering of water rates, besides providing a sinking fund for debentures issued.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall read the Municipal Act, which provides that the Water Commissioners could use their own contingent fund as they had done with the consent of the Municipal Railway Board, provided any expenditure did not exceed $6,000 without consent of the council.

The committee did not appreciate assuming the responsibility of sanctioning this additional expenditure of $20,000, it not having gone to the ratepayers in the usual way. The matter was referred to Monday night's council meeting.

Popular Programme For Third Concert Of Series

The third in the series of concerts under the auspices of the band of the 57th regiment will be held on Friday night of next week and will take the form of a popular programme, that is, the evening will be given over almost entirely to lighter music. Mr. Harry Bennett, of Toronto, one of the best known and funniest humourists in Canada has been secured for the occasion and will be heard in a number of comic songs. The band will play a programme of popular hits, but the offering will be balanced with two standard numbers, the two beautiful overtures, "The Barber of Seville," and "The Bohemian Girl." The third concert promises to be the most enjoyable of the series.

On Monday afternoon the Collegiate Institute, the South Central school and the King Edward school will be visited, and the remainder of the prizes distributed.

The Local Greeks Raise $500 For Battleship Fund

The Greek citizens of Peterborough subscribed this week nearly $500 to the fund for the construction of a battleship for the Greek navy. The visit to the city of the famous Greek poet Matzoukas, aroused the patriotism of his fellow countrymen here, and they responded liberally to his appeal for funds. The colony here is small and that they should donate $500 is an indication of the fact that they are prospering. They are, however, true to their fatherland, and one of them informed the Examiner that if war breaks out against Turkey next Spring, as they seem to expect, that nearly every Greek in Peterborough will leave at once to take part. "If we hear of war starting we'll leave next day," was the way he put it.

Le Soleil, in its report of the nomination meeting of the Liberals of Drummond and Arthabaska at Kingsey Falls on Tuesday, gives an illustration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's remarkable memory.

"You certainly do not remember me, Sir Wilfrid," said a farmer while shaking the Premier's hand. "Do you know who I am?"

After three seconds of hesitation, Sir Wilfrid replied:

"Why, yes, you are Fortunat Durocher. The last time I met you was during my election in 1877."

And so it was.

A DAWNING EPOCH.

Things have changed in a hundred years. Then France and England were at war, and the triumph of Nelson at Trafalgar humiliated the French people, who are to-day our allies. But they have been nobly avenged. The descendant of those same Frenchmen yesterday enjoyed the triumph of welcoming to Canada's shores the pioneer cruiser of the Canadian navy, the lineal descendant of the Victory which reaped victory of Trafalgar. This great event is eloquently epitomized in the words of Hon. Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Marine, who welcomed the Niobe to Canada:

"This event tells the story of a dawning epoch of self-reliance. It proclaims to the whole British Empire that Canada is willing and proud to provide, as rapidly as circumstances will permit, for her local naval defence and to safeguard her share in the commerce and trade of the Empire."

A PARALLEL.

It is becoming in the Conservative party to be loyal to British ideals, and of this we are not without examples in Canada. Conundrums are not generally an edifying form of literary diversion, but they sometimes suggest themselves as timely. A fairly easy one consists in naming the Canadian counterpart of the Great British leader, dealt with in the following paragraph from the Halifax Chronicle: "The London Morning Post, the high priest of the tariff reform propaganda, is bitterly complaining about Mr. Balfour's lack of leadership. It declares that the Unionist leader, in his speech at Edinburgh the other day, on no single issue gave his followers a definite lead, and it predicts that "there can be no alternative ministry to Asquith's until the Unionist leaders know their own minds and have the courage and intelligence to announce a well-defined programme." The truth is, as is well known, Mr. Balfour is a convinced free trader, and h efinds it increasingly difficult to swallow the protectionist dose."

THE GREATER SOO INDUSTRIES.

Time brings its revenges. Only six and a half short years ago the Ross Government saved the great Soo industries from disastrous collapse by guaranteeing a loan of two millions of dollars to put them on their feet. At that time Mr. J. P. Whitney, leader of the Opposition, declared that "the money might as well be thrown into the lake." But yesterday he sent to the Soo two of his ministers, one of whom, Mr. Hanna, had opposed the guarantee, as fiercely as his chief, to officially join in the rejoicing over a magnificent expansion and to declare that the action of the Ross Government was justified. It has been a thousand times justified. We all know what the Soo industries have become, and now we see what they are being equipped to become. Within the course of a very few weeks there will be completed at Sault Ste Marie, four great plants, representing an expenditure of six millions of dollars: a vast new structural steel plant, a coke plant, a gas power plant and blast furnaces. As a politician it may have put a bitter taste in Mr. Hanna's mouth to eat his own words, but as a patriot his heart must have kindled at the splendid results of real statesmanship, that which has faith and foresight.

DOING WELL NOW.

The demands we hear for changes in our fiscal policy, or at least in our tariff, and the demands made for reciprocity of trade with our neighbours, suffer a good deal of modification in the light of the conditions attending present conditions. We have no serious complaint except in the west, of the tariff being too high and no reasonable complaint of it being inadequately low. We know that the present tariff is satisfactory as a producer of revenue and in this respect its efficiency seems to be increasing. It is estimated that this year the revenue will show a surplus of at least thirty millions of dollars, only six millions short of the total revenue in 1896. This beats the record of the record year, 1908, when the credit balance mounted to twenty millions. It is evident, therefore, that the country, is not, to put it mildly, suffering from the operation of the present tariff—either the tariff lends itself to the prevailing national prosperity, or the prevailing prosperity permits the tariff to score so largely. We are getting on well without tariff tinkering and we are getting on well without reciprocity. This may be well counted upon when considering proposals for trade reciprocity with the United States. It is a subject that demands a deal of thinking over. There is a deal of investigating needed before we can be in a position to come to the wisest conclusion in the matter.

FACING BOTH WAYS.

The Mail and Empire speaks of Henri Bourassa and his political allies in Quebec in a friendly and approving tone, and very bitterly of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whom it accuses of being in respect of his naval policy, a disrupter of the Empire; yet, this is the way Mr. Bourassa and his ilk in Quebec, are talking. A Bourrassaite, speaking at St. Anselme, Quebec, on Sunday, used this remarkable language:

"The navy is a conspiracy of the English to drown the Canadians. Laurier has consented, after having betrayed us as regards our language, to man all the ships of war which we will have with French Canadians. This will take 50,000 to 60,000 men, all fathers of families or young men on the point of so becoming, will have to go to Japan, China, or Oceania, under the command of English officers, who, wishing to make our race disappear, will see to it that these ships go to the bottom of the sea. Laurier has sold us to the English in return for the honours he has received, and in twenty-five years there will be no French Canadians left."

Our good Conservative friends seem to be united upon nothing but the desire for office. They have a large and varied assortment of fiscal and tariff policies and in one part of Canada they insist that the Liberal Government's naval policy is a menace to the integrity of the Empire, a separatist influence, while we have the party, or its passively accepted allies, trying to beat the Mail and Empire, in the effort to show that the navy is an engine of British oppression of Canadians, a means of more firmly forging the fetters of British connection.

LESSON OF THE SHELDON INCIDENT.

No matter what mishaps—from slight to grave, from grave to fatal—befall balloonists and terial locomotion adventurers, the crop of imitatives will not fail. Human nature, in some of its manifestations, is always ready to take the long chance; though, as in the case of criminals, each imitator of notorious failures, feels sure that fate will make an exception in his case—there is no danger of him being caught, no danger of him failing. This applies to the Montreal victims of Sheldon, the "blind pool" sharp, who played on these peculiarists in human nature, sharpened and stimulated by the passion of speedy gain-getting, which like hope springs eternal in the human breast. Sheldon's methods differed only in form and magnitude from those of the pea and thimble artist, or the man with the thin, greasy cards that one sees at circuses and exhibitions, who deceive nobody except those blinded with the lust to get something for nothing—to make "easy money." These men employ "cappers"; so did Sheldon; confederates who are allowed to win in so ridiculously an easy way that the unwary are trapped like flies on molasses paper. Sheldon wheedled money out of the people on assurance of quick and enormous returns and some—the "cappers," knowingly, or unknowingly—did get quick returns, enormous rates of interest; especially those who got in first; while thousands of others were straightly swindled.

The surprise is that so many were deceived so easily; and the truth is that few of those who bit at the bait and got bitten are to be pitied. One can well extend pity to girls and women, without advisers or experience in business, or in the crooked ways of the world. But little pity is earned by men of affairs, experienced business men, who were counted in the list of victims. Such must have known that investment of funds with any man could not be made with honest prospect, promises of interest varying from 5 to 30 per cent. per month could be realized. Men like these deserve no pity.

Sheldon's successful campaign of swindle, including about three thousand victims and a clean-up, or clean-out, of about three million dollars, is a lesson tha should be, but will not be, heeded. The next new scheme presented in similarly alluring terms will be the trap of a new crop of victims, unless the authorities show a vigilance, which experience, gives no reason to expect.

In regard to the Sheldon incident, it is worth noting that he might have still been making people rich if his methods had not been exposed by the press, especially the Toronto Saturday Night and the Montreal Herald. While these journals are to be applauded for the work they did in exposing fraud., the necessity thus forced upon them is a reproach to the Provincial authorities that permit such things to flourish boldly under the very noses of the paid agents of law administration and the natural guardians of the people. Men whose business is to discover crime and catch criminals are not filling their places if they allow theinselves to be distanced in the work of protecting the public, by the enterprise of journalism. In one case we have deplorable neglect of duty; in the other a fendid work of supererogation.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Dr. Crippen, the wife murderer, must now realize that British justice has a long reach and a short shrift for the convicted criminal.

Sir Charles Tupper is talking again on Canadian politics. Though the veteran is on the edge of 90 years, he may yet live to come back to Canada to settle the present vexed condition of the Conservative leadership.

It should be noted that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in his speech at Mr. Pelletier's nomination in Drummond and Athabaska, made no appeals whatever to race and creed prejudices. That is left to Mr. Monk and Mr. Bourassa and their journalistic allies in Ontario.

The "Ironclad Manufacturing Company of Canada," with which Peterborough was negotiating for location here, has decided to establish itself in Port Arthur. An agreement has been entered into by which that city gives the company a site of ten acres free of cost, exemption from taxation of the property, of the company with the usual exceptions, electric power at cost price and guarantees the company's bonds, both principal and interest, to the extent of $200,000.

Hon. Dr. Reaume, in defence of the bilingual schools of Essex, so severely criticized by Bishop Fallon, says the fault is "not in the schools, but in the parents, who take their children from school at too early an age." Will Dr. Pyne explain why children are allowed to leave school? Is there not a Truancy Act that can be invoked, and if this is not enough shouldn't the Department of Education secure the necessary statutory authority?

The Use Of Chloride Of Lime In The Purification Of Water

All methods of water purification are of interest in urban or rural districts. Though Peterborough is especially fortunate in the matter of water supply and quality, the following will be of interest to our readers:

The attention of the public, as well as the municipal and health authorities, has been directed during the past few months to the purification of water by means of the addition of a small, very small quantities o thypochlorite of calcium, otherwise known as chloride of lime. We have been led to believe the process is a very simple one; indeed so simple that a child might almost direct the treatment. It is true that in case of emergency, municipal and health authorities may under the direction of a sanitary engineer improvise the means for the application of hypochlorite and thus prevent outbreaks of typhoid fever when the water is sewage polluted; but for the proper and scientific application, as well as for the oversight and management, expert services give the best results, and where a municipality will pay for the services of an expert, the expenditure is more than compensated for by the results obtained. These facts are clearly shown by the work and operation of what is known as the Bubbly Creek Water Purification Plant of the Union Stock Yard and Transit Co. at Chicago, which has been in operation for nearly two years.

First, as to the class of water. Bubbly Creek receives the sewage of about 350,000 people, about the population of the city of Montreal, and a larger population than that of the city of Toronto. The normal size of the creeks is not given but the bacterial results for a period of twelve months shows the maximum to have been 2,360,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter (about 18 drops); while the minimum was 30,000—the average being 354,000 per cubic centimeter.

Without entering into the details, it may be said that the plant consists of pumps, a canal, now part of a sedimentation system, 3 pairs of settling basins and mechanical filters. From these latter the treated water flows into the clear water wells and from there is is supplied to the stock yards.

Consequent upon the close and intelligent oversight maintained, various changes have been made both in operation of the plant and in chemicals used in the treatment of the water. These can be learned in detail by reference to the Engineering Record of Sept. 24th, 1910. At the present time the congulant used is a sulphate of alumina, asolution of a strength of 3.3 per cent. being used. Subsequently hypochlorine solution of a strength of 1.2 per cent. is added, after which the water passes through the filters and is then ready for use.

As regards the cost of operating this particular plant, the contract guaranteed called for nothing in excess of twenty dollars per million gallons, and a still further reduction in the cost of operation will be shown, as since the use of hypochlorite, a total reduction of some 60 per cent. has been made in respect to chemicals alone.

Undoubtedly, municipalities having water supplies liable to contamination by sewage have much to learn from this interesting work, and they certainly can have no excuse hereafter for serving up to the public a sewage polluted water.

(Copr. 1909, by Bradley-Garretson Co. Ltd.)

O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Measure for Measure, Act II., Sc. 2.

Strength — physical, mental, material — is a source of universal admiration. In the forest it is the oak, great of girth and mighty of limb, that excites enthusiasm. In the animal kingdom the lion and the elephant attract the most attention. In a crowd a man who stands head and shoulders above his fellows is the cynosure of all eyes. Strength is coveted; there is no man but desires strength of sinew and muscle.

A giant's strength is excellent. The possessor of it has an advantage over others. He can use it either for the welfare or injury of society. If he exercises his strength in a tyrannous way, instead of being the most admired of men he is the most despised, and is known as a bully and a brute. His strength is not his own, it is humanity's. It is his to enable him to bear the burdens of others, and, in so far as he uses his giant strength in helping the weak over rough places of earth, so far is he fulfilling his destiny. In the animal kingdom the most gigantic creature, the elephant, is the one most in favor. In captivity he becomes docile; he returns affection for affection, and a child can lead him. he has power to be an engine of destruction; instead he is a willing helper of men.

Hte passage:

O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength: but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant

is used in "Measure for Measure" not concerning physical strength, but regarding the exercise of vested power. A pleader is in the presence of a stern judge whose unrelenting attitude calls for the words. He will not pardon. The judge has crushed out the man n his heart. Such a being never inspires love. Shakespeare repeatedly forces on his reader the fact that there is something higher than justice in the world. Mercy, love, "is mightiest in the mightiest." To have power is an excellent thing; to temper power with mercy is a ruler's highest privilege.

The abuse of power in the end usually works out its own punishment. This is true of both nations and individuals. Take the example of Spain. Of her might have been said what Byron said of Persia: Men and the Philippines, her last great in nations and ships by thousands were hers. She is now the least among the nEropean powers. Spain had a giant's strength. She used it like a tyrannous giant. She bullied weaker powers. She abused and crushed her dependants. In Cuba colonies, her memory is a nightmare. She gave way before a power animated largely by the principle of love.

The United States is as a consolidated nation the giant of the earth. So far as her dealings with her dependants are concerned she has not abused her strength. When she subdued Spain, in her hour of victory she was generous. She took over Cuba and the Philippines not for her own aggrandizement but for their good, holding them in tutelage until they would be able t ogovern themselves. England had to exercise all her giant strength to vanquish the Boers. History does not present an example of as great generosity as she displayed towards the people she finally conquered. Her strength in men and ships is admirable, but the helping hand she has extended to the weak is divine. The white races are now realizing that they have a duty towards the weaker races. They are gradually taking up "the white man's burden." It was necessary to send soldiers to the Philippines, but it was not necessary to send teachers. The giant, who had by strength of arm conquered Spain and afterwards the rebellious native tribes, sought to hold what it had won by love.

Napoleon is a striking example of an individual with a giant's power. Through his gift for controlling men he subdued the half of Europe. He made a tyrannous use of his power and his na meis for the most part abhorred. He was "a vulgar conqueror," "the scavenger of Europe." His sins found him out, and he perished a miserable exile on a lonely Atlantic island.

There are many men who through their wealth have a giant's strength. In the twentieth century crowned kings are shorn of their power; in their stead kings of finance rule the destinies of the nations. The Rothschilds, the Morgans, the Rhodes, and the Rockefellers are the real rulers of humanity. They make wars and conclude peace. They construct tariff walls between the different countries or pull them down. Armies and fleets move at their word. Some of the mare crueller than the giants of ancient fable—more insatiable. The majority, however, are realizing that theirstrength is not their own. It belongs to humanity. While this is an age of large fortunes, it is equally an age of philanthropy. Individually and collectively we are learning that "mightier far than strength of nerve or sinew is love." Love tames the brute; the giant under rit sinfluence becomes a burden-carrier, delighting to help others bear their crosses.

Gen. Booth's Love Story Told In Tribute To Wife

On the Twentieth Anniversary of the Death of the Salvation Army "Mother" He Writes Touchingly of His Three Year Engagement---Felt He Could Not Provide Her With Home and Comfort.

LONDON, OCT. 13. — General Booth has just observed the twentieth anniversary of the death of his wife, the "mother" of the Salvation Army, and in the War Cry he pays a touching tribute to her memory.

He recalls to mind the day—April 10, 1852 when "I met my beloved wife, and commenced a relationship which has lasted from that day to this, and which I am reckoning will continue to the closing hours of my earthly history, and be renewed at the gates of the Celestial City. We met that evening at a sort of public festival of some Methodist people with whom we were both associated. Between the tea drinking and the speaking Catherine Mumford was introduced to me by a mutual friend, who spoke of her in terms of the strongest admiration."

HEART'S DOOR WIDE OPEN

"No doubt," proceeded the General, "I voluntarily threw my heart's door wide open, not knowing perhaps what I was doing, and she, not unwillingly, equally unconscious of what she was doing, walked in and took the first place there. From that place she was never dislodged—indeed, from it there was never the least inclination to remove her, and there never will be."

General Booth says there were difficulties i nthe way o fan engagement. He felt that his position was not equal to the responsibility bf keeping a wife and home in comfort.

"These views," he says, "led me to look upon the unexpected situation in which I found myself as a real calamity, and I fought with all my might against the strange feelings that had taken possession of my breast. What could I do with a wife? In the first place, I was without any settled income, and had no immediate prospect of finding one, having just separated myself not only fro mbusiness, but from the people in whose ministry I had the prospect of a call.

"ENGAGEMENT" TO LAST FOREVER

"However, we looked carefully at each other and at our circumstances, and found that we were both quite prepared to wait any number of years that might be necessary before marriage ;and with this understanding we entered into an engagement that lasted for nearly fort yyears in this world, and will, I fondly believe, last forever in the world to come."

Three years, as a matter of fact, elapsed before the marriage was celebrated. These years were devoted by the General to making the most of his opportunity for saving the people to whom he ministered.

"In all this," he goes on, "this beautiful woman strove, in season and out, of season, in circumstances pleasing or painful, to keep me faithfully and self-denyingly to my task."

Mrs. Booth did not speak at any of her husband's meetings until some years after her marriage, always giving as her reason her conviction that she was not called to the duty.

SUBSCRIBERS TO THE CHIMES FUND DISCUSS STEPS TO BE TAKEN

Much Valuable Information Was Given at Last Night's Meeting of Those Interested. Several Resolutions Were Passed. Committee Will Be Appointed to Work Out the Details.

A meeting of the subscribers to the Chimes Fund was held in the City Council Chamber last evening at 8 o'clock. Quite a number of prominent citizens attended, and a great amount of business was transacted, as regards the movement in connection with the chimes.

Rev. Canon Davidson was in the chair, and opened the meeting by making a short speech, in which he said that he did not want to go and do everything his own way, without having the opinions of those who helped and subscribed to the Chimes Fund. Now that we have got a considerable amount of money together," said Canon Davidson, "the public are looking for something to be done. I thought that it was reasonable and only right that a public meeting of the subscribers should be called; so that we could act according to the will of the people who have subscribed to the fund. I would like to satisfy the people of the city and that was my reason for calling a meeting. It rests with the people present whether they consider that enough people are here to represent 1,500 subscribers, and to go on and make resolutions and carry them into effect. However, in any case, we can do some things and discuss some of the difficulties in connection with purchasing the chimes. Information will not be so definite as wished, on account of certain subscribers who cannot be present, but such information as could be given can be discussed and then the meeting can be adjourned until some future time."

"I have here, some resolutions, not that they will be adopted, but to show them for consideration. We must not forget to thank the press for the untold assistance they have rendered us. The satisfying of the public is the one thing that I want to do. People say: "Get the best chime of bells that can be purchased." This is quite an impossibility. The higher price that is paid the better the bells will be, so that there are no "best." A man wrote to me and was very enthusiastic over a set of bells that he saw in a certain American city. There were 14 bells, the largest bell weighing 4,800 lbs., the price of this set was $10,000. The price is the sticker. We must be contented with smaller things, and get what is best suited to the size of the city. People will say that we might get a better bargain here and there, but $3,500 will buy $5,000 worth, but no amount gets the best. Coburg's $3,500 set of chimes would not suit us. Another point to be discussed is where we will get them. Shall we purchase them solely from the United States, Germany, England, or where? These difficult questions are the ones we should get information about."

Canon Davidson also said that they could go on until morning and there would still be questions contending them, but the meeting was for the purpose of giving and getting opinions. And if they thought that enough were present to represent the 1,500 subscribers to go ahead and elect a committee to take the responsibility.

The meeting did not consider that there were enough people present to do this, however, so the business of lesser importance was proceeded with.

Canon Davidson drew their attention to the old residents of the city, who have not been here for twenty years, and who have sent subscriptions of $100. A subscription was received of $100 from Vancouver, and two of $100 each from Toronto.

Mr. G. C. Wainwright then spoke of what he knew about the business so far. He said that several offers had been made by different companies, but there were four from which to choose, being the four principal companies. The companies and their respective offers are as follows:

Pettit & Edelbrock Bros., Germany, offered a set of bells weighing 17,000 lbs., the largest bell weighing 3,900 lbs., and the smallest bell being about one-third the size of the bell they had in the tower at present. The cost of this set was $5,000.

Meneley & Co., New York, offered a set of eleven bells, weighing 10,600 lbs., and costing $5,000. They would install the bells and make them complete in every particular for this price. They also wanted the old bell in part payment, and in the event of their not getting the old bell, they would charge $5,200 for the above mentioned set. Something must be counted on the installing. It would cost about $200 or $300 to install them. This Company also made an offer to put in a smaller set at $4,540.

Mr. Wainwright said that he had been told by a Mr. Wallace of Woodstock, that there was no difficulty in installing the chimes themselves. He said that the Woodstock people installed the chimes there themselves and were only a few days at it.

Then Mr. Wainwright spoke of another offer they had been made. Mears & Stainbank, London, Eng., offered a set of nine bells, weighing 10,000 lbs., at a cost of $4,280; and also made an offer of a smaller set, the largest bell weighing 1,700 lbs, at $3,500.

The next offer was made by John Taylor & Co., Loughborough, Eng. He offered a set of eleven bells, weighing 14,000 lbs., the largest weighing 3,000 lbs., at $5,200.

Mr. Wainwright went on to state a few opinions regarding the purchasing. He said that he would not attempt to influence one way or another as to what company to buy of, but he had his own opinion of the one he would buy of. A comparatively small amount of the subscription money is yet unpaid. Out of the $5,000, $3,900 has been collected, and an amount bringing the collections up to $4,500 could be obtained by merely asking for it.

Mr. Wainwright said that in his opinion it would be better to wait for a while and get as many more subscriptions as possible. He also stated that in his opinion it would be advisable to elect a committee of two or three men and send them to Woodstock, Hamilton and other places, where there are chimes, so that they could form some opinion as to the kind and size that would be most suitable to Peterborough. He also said that even if they put in the order now they could not expect to have them before the first of next July.

The day of ringing them for the first time was also discussed. All agreed that Coronation Day would be the best. Several of the companies asked for four months to complete the bells from the time the order was given, the German Company, however, only asked for ten weeks.

Mr. O. W. Hutton was the next to speak. He said that they should feel especially thankful to Mr. Wainright for the valuable information he had imparted to them, and that he was in favour of getting as large a set of chimes as the tower would admit. He said he was in favour of getting the 1,700 pound set, if the tower would admit them, and if not to get the English set of 1,400 pounds. He said that in Denver there was a set of chimes weighing 40,000 pounds and of course any person who had the pleasure of hearing them, was greatly impressed with them, but he also emphasized the fact that a person who had never heard chimes before, would be impressed with a much smaller set. However, he said that a few hundred dollars should not stop the people of Peterborough in getting the best and largest that the tower would admit. He said that he would be glad to have a committee organized and in the event of their doing this, he would gladly help in the defraying of their expenses.

Mr. Elliott arose and said that he was of the same opinion as Mr. Hutton. He also said that the German manufacturers should be asked about the 15,000 pound bells, since they appeared to be a little cheaper than the others.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay was then asked to give his opinion. He said that he quite agreed with what was said, but he felt that whatever was going to be done should be done at once, as the people who had subscribed, were of the opinion that things were progressing very slowly. He also said that he thought that the contract should be let at once and get the rest of the necessary subscription afterwards. He said that as soon as the people found out that the contract had been let, they would subscribe more if this amount was necessary. He said that they should come to a conclusion as to the size of bells they were going to get and elect a committee to take the responsibility.

Canon Davidson spoke of the awkward position the would be placed in, in the event of their letting the contract and then being $800 or $900 behind in the payment. He said that he thought that it would be better to wait until they had the right amount and make sure of getting into no difficulties in the matter.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill said that the present committee had acted very well and that it was in his opinion that another committee should be chosen and sent to other cities to look at the chimes. He said that if more funds were needed there would be some person who would help them. He said they would also be a great attraction to the city and would be also very much enjoyed by the people here.

The following resolutions were passed:

1.—That the meeting expresses its satisfaction at the wide and generous support given to the movement to procure a chime of bells for the city, to be placed in St. John's tower, and further expresses its strong conviction that this object will be for the great advantage of our city.

2.—That the general demand for bells of large size and best quality necessitates a correspondingly large expenditure of money and accordingly in the public interests, we ask that the subscription list be kept open and added to by all individuals and associates, who may be willing and who have not yet joined in the effort; we being convinced that at least more than $5,500 is necessary for the purpose in view of the information laid before the meeting.

3.—That the present Chimes Committee appoint a committee within themselves to place an order for a suitable set of chimes at the earliest possible moment.

4.—That the meeting of citizens' expresses its grateful appreciation of the splendid generosity of former citizens in supporting the project as they have done for the good of the city.

5.—That in the opinion of the meeting it is important that all unpaid subscriptions be paid in to the treasurer.

Canon Davidson then spoke of calling another meeting of the subscribers later on, but stated that there was no use of calling a meeting if the people did not turn out. He also thanked those present for attending the meeting.

During the progress of the meeting a great deal of discussion took place over the fact that England should be patronized, from a patriotic point of view, and, of course, it was intimated that quite a number of the subscribers, being English, was another good reason why they should patronize England. The company from which the chimes will be purchased will be decided on later.

$12,500 Will Be Required For The New Isolation Hospital

The Property committee of the City Council met last evening and several matters of importance were taken up. Those present were Ald. Duncan, in the chair, Mayor Morrow, Ald. Graham, Batten, Morgan and Bradburn. The committee first met Messrs. E. H. D. Hall, A. Mowat and D. Spence from the Public Library Board in reference to the purchase of stacks, desks and other supplies for the new Library. It was decided that the chairman and Ald Bradburn should meet the new Library Board to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock at the new library and discuss the matter of furnishings.

Regarding the new fence for the Public Library a tender was received from Rutherford Bros. but the matter was left in the hands of the chairman to get an estimate from Street Commissioner Evans as to the cost of a cement fence.

It was decided to have a wire fence built at both ends of the new South City Park.

The matter of supplies and furnishings for the new Isolation Hospital was next taken up with Dr. McPherson, Medical Health Officer. The doctor outlined the requirements and the estimated cost of each. Twenty-four cots and beds would be required for patients' rooms, in addition to the furnishings required for a matron's and five nurses quarters. The estimated cost of dishes and glassware be placed at $100, beds and pillows $375, tables and side tables $220, dressers, chairs and pictures $200, blinds and bedding (twelve sheets to each bed), and table linen, $920, kitchen supplies $285, dispensary and laboratory $100, gas or electric heaters $20. This made a total of a little over $2000, but Dr McPherson thought that $1500 would be sufficient for a good start. He also pointed out that if a local nurse was chosen as matron she would have to take a course in an Isolation Hospital, preferably at Montreal. The matter of securing a matron was left to the chairman and the Medical Health Officer. It was moved by Ald Bradburn, seconded by the Mayor that a by-law be submitted for the Council authorizing the issuing of debentures for $12,500, instead of $12,000.

Mr. Robt Wilson, caretaker of the City Buildings, wrote asking for an increase in salary. He is at present receiving $575. Ald. Morgan and Batten were favourable to a raise of fifty dollars, but a motion moved by Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald Graham that his salary be raised $25 per month and the motion, Wilson will receive $600.

On request of E. H. D. Hall, chairman of the Library Board, said board was authorized to the $4000 appropriation made the beginning of the year for the Public Library's maintenance in the time of its opening until next year's annual estimates.

The old Library's liabilities in the neighbourhood of $500. All indebtedness the new board alleged to assume.

Chairman Ald. Duncan and E. H. D. Hall, chairman of the Library Board, were authorized to visit Toronto's public library, in the hope of acquiring information that will effect a saving in fitting out Peterborough's new library.

It will be about eight weeks before the new library is opened.

A PRODUCTION OF SOME SIZE

Lew Fields' mammoth spectacular musical production, which ran for 36 weeks at the Broadway Theatre New York, will be the Shubert's offering at the Grand theatre next Thursday Oct 17th, when this marvellous play of music, vaudeville, comedy and drama, with its cast of over 100 people, special vaudeville company of dancers and singers, English pony ballet, Pullman train in motion, and realistic theatre scene with an audience of 500 people, makes its first visit to this city. This engagement, it is expected, will mark an epoch in local theatricals.

It will be recalled by those familiar with the doings of the theatre and more especially by many who regularly visit New York that "The Midnight Sons" ran at the Broadway theatre for nearly a year. The exact period was 36 weeks. After that the play visited Boston, Washington and Philadelphia, rounding out 56 consecutive weeks without the loss of a single performance.

Some idea of the enormity of the production may be gained from the fact that the weekly pay roll of the "extra" people averages nearly $600. These people are used in the marvellous theatre scene which shows the interior of an opera house with its tiers of boxes, orchestra seats, balcony and gallery. Every member of the cast and there are over 100 people—take part in this scene, but it is necessary to engage outside "help" to properly give the illusion.

Another scene which never fails to win applause and invariably calls for wonderment, is that showing a Pullman train in motion with a bridal party on the rear platform waving good-byes to the audience. This scene is patented and is used exclusively by "The Midnight Sons."

There are thirty musical numbers, Raymond Hubbell having written the each of which Glen McDonough, who is responsible for "The Jolly Bachelors" and "The Summer Widowers," wrote added features of "The Midnight Sons." Lew Fields will present the fish pony ballet and a special company of vaudeville artists who take part in the theatre scene.

SPLENDID LECTURE BY REV. FATHER O'SULLIVAN IN LYCEUM LAST NIGHT

Scholarly Address by the Founder of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society Who Was Honoured by a Presentation During the Evening.

The theatre of St. Alphonsus Lyceum was crowded last night to hear Rev. Father O'Sullivan's lecture on Catholic Libraries. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Literary Society, Rev. Father Casey presiding. A short musical program was first rendered which was contributed to by Miss Lottie Hatterick, piano solo; Mr. Harry Quinlan and Miss Vera Devlin, vocal solos. Mr Quinlan is an old favorite and Miss Devlin made a very promising debut last night. Both were exceedingly well received and had to respond to hearty encores. Miss L. Hurley, the president of the Society, accompanied.

The minutes having been read by the hon secretary, the chairman introduced the reverend lecturer.

REV. FATHER FRANK O'SULLIVAN
Who Delivered a Splendid Lecture Before the Ladies' Section of St. Peter's T.A.S. Last Night.

"As chairman of this meeting," said Rev. Father Casey, "the very pleasing duty devolves on me of introducing to you the lecturer of the evening. It is a duty that becomes a mere formality at a meeting like this, because every one of you know Rev. Father O'Sullivan, or know of him, and I am sure he holds a very high place in your regard. More I may not say of him, because if I begin to praise him it will be too much for his modesty, and he may refuse to speak to us at all. As to the lecture with which he is going to favour us to-night I am sure that I am but voicing your sentiments when I say that we anticipate a scholarly and interesting treatment of a very interesting subject, and I know that you are all deeply grateful to Father O'Sullivan for honoring our society by coming here to give us the inaugural address. He comes before us on very short notice as it is only a week ago to-day since I asked him to come to us to-night. You will say that I must have taken my courage in both hands when I ventured to approach him like that. But you know Father O'Sullivan is the kindliest of men—and anyway I protected myself from Laddie harm by asking him over the phone. (laughter) I told him that if he consented, Peterborough would give him a royal reception, and looking out at this meeting I can safely say that Peterborough has redeemed my promise. On behalf of Father O'Sullivan, I thank you one and all most heartily, and I hope that this meeting to-night is but the nucleus of many more successful meetings in the months to come. Properly supported, a society such as this cannot fail to have a good influence on our social life. The Ladies' Literary Society is something more than an agreeable way of wasting time. It should be and we hope to make it an intellectual force in the city—a society and make us better mentally, socially and morally. Friendly intercourse with our kind had an educational value. It had been said that the best university is the world, and here in this Society we have a little world, with different characters, different minds, different ideas, and different view points, the mingling of which must naturally broaden all our minds and widens our sympathies. Culture in the best sense—that was what they aimed at in this Society. It was a Society of culture because it sets high ideals before its members—the ideals of the best men and women that ever lived upon this broad earth—the men who lived and wrote and gave their lives for humanity, the great authors of all times and their immortal works. I hope said Father Casey, that this is but the beginning of a good year's work, and that on each alternate Friday when we gather in this hall, it will be with renewed enthusiasm and growing numbers.

Rev. Father O'Sullivan then came forward to deliver his lecture. He spoke in part as follows:—

One of the most useful and most necessary adjuncts of a Catholic Literary Society is a Catholic library, for we must gather the grain of information to feed the mills of thought. I have chosen the history of Catholic libraries in order that you may have a better appreciation of the very excellent one that you have in this institution.

At the time of the fall of Rome there were in existence not only in the eternal city but in many centres throughout the provinces very extensive manuscript libraries containing among other things the ancient classics, the fruit of the golden age of Grecian and Roman letters. These became a prey to the Vandal the Goth and the Iconoclast and were it not for the Church the only institution that maintained its existence throughout that wreck and ruin the ancient learning would have been irretrievably lost. She it was that gathered together the fragments, for only fragments remained, and preserved them together with the Sacred Scriptures and her own ecclesiastical literature in her monastic Cathedral and university libraries. Not only did she preserve them but she multiplied them by the labour of her copyists and added to them her own literary treasures. During the forty hours devotion which has just closed in this parish you have sung the "Lauda Sion" and the "Pange Lingua" and during the month of the holy souls you will often sing the "Dies Irae". It is well to remember that this incomparable poetry was the work of monks of the thirteenth century, St Thomas of Aquin and Thomas of Celano and that many of the beautiful English hymns in honour of our Lady are translations of the Latin verse of St. Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury, who lived in the eleventh century. It is a historical fact which no one can gainsay that the preservation of the Sacred Scriptures, the writing of the Fathers, the annals of the past, and whatever of their ancient learning remained at the time of the invention of printing by Guttenburg, was due solely to the libraries of the middle ages which flourished under the shadow of the church and the patronage of the hierarchy and the Holy See. Nearly all the great universities of Europe and Great Britain had their origin during that period. They taught and preserved in their libraries the ancient classics which are studied in our colleges and high schools and which are the models of all that is best in our literature.

The religious upheaval of the sixteenth century dealt a more serious blow to the ancient learning than did the Vandal and the Saracen. The Huguenot wars in France wrought the destruction of most of the manuscript libraries in that country including that of St. Benedict Sur Loire with its 5,000 volumes, while the religious war in Germany was responsible for the destruction of much of its literary treasures. What was accomplished by mob violence in Europe was brought about by an Act of Parliament in England. The extensive libraries of Oxford and Cambridge Universities were either burned or sold to green grocers for wrapping paper. Had it not been for these two much despised countries of Spain and Italy, little of the ancient learning would have remained. Chief of the libraries of the latter country was that of the Vatican in Rome. Established in the 6th century by St. Hilary it seems to have shared in the perpetuity of the chair of Peter. To-day it is the first library in the world by reason of its antiquity, its extent and valuable manuscript collections. By permitting public access to it Leo XIII. made Rome the mecca of scholars from all countries without distinction of race or creed.

The invention of printing in the 15th century created a new era in the history of libraries which increased rapidly in number and extent. Catholic literature in Great Britain was however for the next 200 years at a standstill. How could we expect it to flourish in England, where as Cardinal Newman tells us "the little handful of Catholics who remained faithful were looked upon with curiosity and suspicion as the adherents of a worn out superstition"? How could we expect it to flourish in Ireland where it was a crime to be a priest or a school teacher? Yet we owe to that period some valuable religious and controversial works, such as Butler's "Lives of the Saints", Milner's "End of Controversy", and Dr. Hay's "Sincere and Devout Christian", while English literature since the Re-

LOCAL TREATMENT FOR WOMEN'S DISORDERS

The health we enjoy depends very largely upon how the blood circulates in our bodies, in other words, if we have perfect circulation we will have perfect health.

There is a constant wearing out of the tissues in every part of the body. The blood flowing through the veins carries off this waste or dead matter, while the blood coming from the heart through the arteries brings the fresh new living tissue, the essence of the food we have digested to repace what has been carried off. This constant wearing out and expelling of the dead matter and the replacing of it with new matter, atom by atom, goes on day and night, until in about 7 years a complete change has been effected. Thus every man and woman has an entirely different body in every particle of it from what he or she had 7 years before.

It sometimes happens, however, from a variety of causes, that the blood becomes congested in certain portions of the body. This means that the blood vessels in these parts become weakened, and the circulation in that portion of the body becomes sluggish and stagnant. The consequence is that the dead matter in that part of the body is only partially carried away, and that but little of the new, vital matter is introduced there to build up and strengthen the tissues and nerves.

This condition invariably exists in all cases of female disorders. The dead matter retained in the circulation, which should have been expelled, causes irritation and inflammation of the delicate membrane, and oppresses the nerve centres. This condition is the cause of the grievous physical and mental suffering which accompanies female troubles.

To obtain relief it is evident that the first thing to be done is to get rid of the dead matter which is being held in the circulation. If this dead matter is allowed to remain there a specie of blood poisoning will result and nature will endeavor to get rid of it by forming ulcers, tumors, etc.

The above explanation will also show why ORANGE LILY is so successful in curing this condition. It is a local treatment, and is applied direct to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissue, and from the very start the dead matter begins to be discharged. A feeling of immense relief both mental and physical, accompanies it, and the improvement is constant and positive. This feature of the expelling of the dead matter is always present to a greater or less extent, and in some cases it is so marked as to be amazing. The case described in the following letter is not exceptional:

Dr. Cromer, I am thankful to Mrs. F. E. Currah, your Canadian representative, for my health restored by your wonderful remedy. I have suffered for 17 years but not so bad until 3 years ago. Then I had a doctor, who told me I had a tumor and could live no more than a year. If I went through an operation I would not live through it. A year later I sent for him again, and he gave me up to die. My husband then sent for another doctor, who performed an operation, and my husband came home and threw a slip of paper to me with Mrs. Currah's address and told me a lady had advised him to write to her for a treatment that would cure me. I said it was too late, that I would die anyway. I could not lift a tea-cup without hurting me. Then the first doctor told me I was worse than ever. However, my husband sent for ORANGE LILY, and the third treatment brought away one tumor. Others followed, until 7 tumors had been expelled, 3 large ones and 4 small ones. I know if it had not been for ORANGE LILY I would have died, for I could not live much longer. I would have thought it cheap at one hundred dollars for a month's treatment, instead of one dollar. It is worth its weight in gold.—MRS. GEO. LEWIS, Duncastle, Ont.

The above letter is published with Mrs. Lewis' permission. All letters received are treated as being sacredly confidential, but occasionally some patient feels so grateful for being cured that she is willing to make the matter known for the benefit and encouragement of her suffering sisters.

ORANGE LILY is a positive, scientific remedy for all disorders of the female functions. As explained above these troubles are of local origin, and require local treatment. It is just as sensible to take medicine internally for female troubles as it would be to take medicine internally for a bruise, a boil or an ulcerated tooth. In all these cases some dead matter is being retained, and the cure is effected by employing local methods for expelling the dead matter. ORANGE LILY has antiseptic, soothing and healing properties, and also tones up and invigorates blood vessels and nerves. I am so anxious that every suffering woman may call for herself, without cost to her, that ORANGE LILY will cure her, that I hereby make the following

WAS UNDER CROSS EXAMINATION FOUR HOURS BUT ACTED COOLY

Crippen Came Out Well After a Day Matched with One of the Sharpest Wits in England—Tells of Flight

TO SAVE A SCANDAL

Examiner Special.

London, Oct. 22.—Dr. Hawley H. Crippen, accused of the murder of his wife, known to the theatrical profession as Belle Elmore, matched wits yesterday with Richard Muir, one of the cleverest criminal lawyers in England. Crippen was under cross-examination for practically four hours. Throughout that time he was the personification of coolness.

The defence, as soon as Dr. Crippen left the stand, began examining various medical experts, each of whom swore, without qualification, that the alleged scar found on the piece of flesh in the Crippen home was not a scar, swearing that under no condition could a gland form on a scar, yet such a growth had formed on the alleged scar.

Barrister A. A. Tobin immediately thereafter began addressing the jury for the prisoner. King's Counsel Muir will address the jury to-day, and Lord Alverstone, the lord chief justice, who is presiding at the trial, will charge the jury immediately after lunch.

When Crippen was escorted to the witness-box yesterday, he rested his elbows on the railing, clasped his hands and looked enquiringly about the court room. Mr. Muir, losing no time in preliminaries, asked Crippen whether he had seen or heard anything of his wife since early on the morning of Feb. 1. He replied in the negative, and in answer to further questions that were rapidly fired at him said that he could not prove any fact showing that she left the house alive. He supposed that she had gone to Bruce Miller, her professional acquaintance who lives in Chicago.

Mr. Muir suggested that if the witness's wife were alive she would call upon her sisters in the United States. Crippen's reply to this was that if his wife had gone with another man she would not have "the face" to go to her sisters. This opinion of the witness drew forth a chorus of "ohs" from the spectators.

"When she left you thought how to cover up the scandal?"

"Yes."

"It involved you in a great deal of trouble?"

"That has been already acknowledged."

Asked why he wished to conceal his wife's disappearance Crippen said he didn't wish to let his friends think he had been ill-treating her, and to avoid a scandal.

"When you were living in open adultery with Miss Leneve?" said Mr. Muir.

"It was not so open as you seem to imagine."

"You had treated your wife well, given her money, furs and jewels for four years, and ceased to cohabit; then she treated you with ingratitude, and left you. Why seek to cover up the scandal about such a wife?"

"I cannot explain in any other way than I have done," said Crippen.

As to the discovery of the buried flesh, he said: "My wife and I were often away from home on visit to other parts of England and on the continent, and it would have been possible for someone else to have placed the flesh where it was found. I must admit, though, that this seems very improbable. I have not the slightest idea how came the flesh there, and I have no theory that might account for its presence. The thing is as great a mystery to me as it is to the police."

Counsel next led Crippen to his departure from London. The prisoner said that he made up his mind to go away on the 9th of July, the morning Inspector Dew called. He thought there was sufficient against him, the result of which he might have to be in jail for months, till his wife was found.

"What crime did you anticipate you would be kept in prison for?"

"I do not understand the law enough to say. I have heard of people being arrested of suspicion of being concerned in the disappearance of other people. I thought I should be held until the woman was found if I could not produce the woman. Dew told me I should be in serious trouble. I also knew it would put Miss Leneve in a serious position, and the only idea I could think of was to take her out of the country."

Referring to the card upon which Crippen had written his intention to jump overboard, and which Crippen stated was part of the plot to deceive the police at Quebec, counsel asked Crippen whose idea it was that that should be written. Dr. Crippen said the quartermaster suggested to him that he must leave behind something to show that he was going to jump overboard.

Crippen said the quartermaster spoke to him on July 30 just behind the captain's cabin, and in the afternoon he handed him a letter in the wheelhouse in which he said that the captain knew who he (Crippen) was, and that the police would arrest him at Quebec. If he lived, however, he would slow him away and smuggle him ashore at Montreal. The letter was not signed and the quartermaster took it away from him directly he had read it. "He seemed afraid to trust me," added Crippen.

During the four hours on the stand Crippen did not lose his composure, but he was deathly pale when he left the chair and appeared on the point of collapse.

Addressing the jury Mr. Tobin reviewed the evidence at length, contending that in view of the conflicting testimony of experts it was impossible for the jury to find a verdict of guilty.

Regarding the non-appearance in court of the quartermaster of the steamship Montrose, counsel said that the man would be rendered liable to a charge of impeding the police if he corroborated the testimony of Crippen, to the effect that the quartermaster and he had arranged for the pretended suicide of the doctor.

To the authorities of the City. I wish to call your attention to the fact that the wire in the Central Park, dividing the school grounds from the park is very dangerous to people's clothes, and ought to be attended to at once, as there is little pieces of wire projecting out from the main wire, along the fence. I, myself have suffered from it by getting my skirt badly torn, and wish to warn the authorities before further damage is done.

PELT THE ESQUIMO GIRLS

An Interesting Feature in "The Alaskan"

The piece has been entirely revised and "musicalized" by Richard F. Carroll and Gus Weinberg, who have taken care, in the general revision, to equip themselves with strong comedy parts, so much so that now the laughter is incessant from rise to fall of curtain. Several new interpolations have been made, and the novel "Snowballing" song in which the audience is allowed to pelt the Esquimaux girls with fluffy white missiles, creates no end of excitement. "Laughing Powders," "For I Dream of You," "Hi Hi Hi" and "The Face of the Girl I Love" are amongst the song hits.

Several new terpsichorean divertisements have been added, and an entire general going over of everything makes "The Alaskan" a welcome visitor. The piece in its present form, it will be remembered, had a five months' run in Chicago, and was voted the best musical comedy exploited in many years. Detmar Poppen, Al Rauh, Leo Kendall, Sidney Algiers, Jessie Stoner, Alice Keen, Etta Lockhardt, Marcel Scott and a large and exceptionally well trained chorus go to form the present "Alaskan" company.

GENERALLY SPEAKING

Anonymous Letters.

It may be taken as a fairly sound principle that the man or woman who writes an anonymous letter to a paper for the express purpose of doing injury to someone's public or private interests is not an absolutely honest being. Anyone who can so demean himself or herself is on a considerably lower level than the individual who buttonholes one in the street and recounts some scandalous story concerning a mutual acquaintance. In journalistic work one is so often confronted with this style of authorship that it soons gets to be scarcely noticeable amongst the many odds and ends of communications that are daily received. But the spirit that prompts such action on the part of a writer is without doubt a most contemptible one.

Fame Has Its Bounds.

Looking casually through Lempriere's dictionary the other day, I came upon an account of the Roman comic poet, Plautus, and nothing struck me so forcibly as the statement that his plays continued in popular favour, for at least 500 years, despite the disadvantages of obsolete language and diction, changes of manner and revolutions of government that took place during that period. But the fame of Plautus which was no doubt looked upon by the ancients as destined to be immortal, has vanished into thin air, and his comedies, of which about 20 are still extant, are for virtuosi to read and a few puzzle headed scholars to translate. And the name of Plautus conjures up the name of a greater talm he, one whose commentators have been legion, and the sun of whose genius has been acclaimed as the brightest that has yet dawned on the world of literature, William Shakspere. Not in our time and generation can the answer be found forthcoming as to the ultimate fate of his works, but time is long and taste is tickle, and even Shaks-pere, transcendent genius as he was, may one day pass into the chamber of neglect and thence through the portals that open out to oblivion.

About Skewers.

In New York wholesale meat dealers of the city are selling no less than 587,662 pounds of wood a year to the retail butchers as meat. The wood is in the form of skewers, which are put into the carcases. The value of this amount of meat at an average of 16 cents a pound, is close to $100,000, and this amount of course comes eventually out of the pockets of the public. It would be interesting to know how much paper and string the public have to pay for as well. Butchers' wrapping paper is heavy and we have known certain members of the trade (not in Peterborough) to charge the wrapped parcel and not the unwrapped, to the purchaser.

Difficulties in Journalism.

A few days ago after cudgelling my brains in vain for a subject that would lend itself to exploitation in this column a happy thought seized me of endeavouring to get a few ideas from friends. It is not in any way meant as a sarcastic commentary on the brain power of those said friends when I state that not one amongst them was able to furnish me with a solitary idea. At last I approached a sad, but somewhat surly looking individual and told him of my quandary. His face lit up with a smile. "Why," he said, "you're just the man I want. Look here, I've been making up a list of grievances that I have been meaning to write up, and as you're more used to slinging together words than I am, I'll give you the whole bally lot and you can give the Council a good warming up." Now, a great many people, this man amongst them, seem to look upon the members of a city council as so many figure heads to throw things at, just as they look upon anyone who is suddenly placed in a position of responsibility and prominence as a fit target for all the unpleasant criticism that they can conjure up in their minds. But surely the right thing for any man with a grievance is to publish it himself above his own signature, and not attempt to shoulder his responsibility upon the new-paper.

Misplaced Expressions.

In an article on Church and Chapel Humour in the English Illustrated, the following is given: "At the graveside," wrote a Vicar, in an account, in his parish magazine, of the funeral of a church member, "the undertaker was seized with a fit, and though medical assistance was hastily summoned, expired almost immediately." Then added the Vicar: "This unhappy event cast quite a gloom over the proceedings."

Here is another well-meaning parish notice, on which the intention of the clergyman might have been better expressed: "Gospel Hall. At 6.30, 'The Feast of Death.' All are welcome."

Spoonerisms.

Spoonerisms belong to a category of unconscious humour of their own. The original one perpetrated by the learned Dean Spooner, of New College, Oxford, was a variation of the hymn, "Conquering kings their titles take," which the Dean is supposed to have gravely given out as "Tinqering tongs their kitles take"; then, nervously noticing his error, to have altered the line to the famous expression, "Kinquering kongs their titles take." On another occasion he is said to have given out the following text: "Sorrow may endure for a joy, but night cometh in the morning."

TWENTY-NINE IN THE JUNIOR

Two Indian Entries Have Been Received for the Junior Event As Well As One From Cobourg---Senior Runners Must Be Registered With the C.A.A.U.---The Prizes on Exhibition To-night.

Some notable entries came along for the Examiner road races to-day, the most important being that in the senior of Albert Smoke, of the Chemong Athletic Club, who won the big event last year in the second fastest time made in the history of the race and only fifty two seconds behind Ernie Wilson's 1907 record. Smoke is in good shape and will make a big effort to repeat the trick this year. The Chemong Athletic Club to-day also entered two promising Indian juniors in the person of Allan Knott, a twelve year old half brother of Smoke's and Russell Taylor, another speedy youngster. To-day's mail also brought an entry from Cobourg for the junior race. G. Holnbeck is the lake shore kid who is going to make an effort to carry off the Examiner junior events.

It should be remembered that the races are under the sanction of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union, and that all senior runners must have a C.A.A.U. card showing that they are registered amateurs before they are allowed to compete. All those who have entered the senior race are asked to call at the Examiner office as soon as possible to arrange for their registration. THE CAREER OF CONNIE MACK, ATHLETIC LEADER

Cornelius McGillicuddy is a long name and the owner of it is probably one of the most capable baseball managers in the game. But if you should address him that way he would probably stop to think whether he had been called in vain. Connie Mack, however, is the name by which he is known wherever the national game is played, and it's a name to conjure with, too.

Mack was a ballplayer once—a catcher—and he first began to attract attention along about 1890, when he was the receiver for the Meriden club and handled the curves of a pitcher named Crane. Both were six-footers, lanky and lean, so that when they were purchased by Walter Hewitt for the old Washington (National League) club they were quickly called the Giraffe Battery.

Mack became a first-class catcher and his work was admired all over the big circuit. Later on he became the manager of the Pittsburgs, a job he held for several years, but he was hampered in many ways and could not win a pennant.

When Uncle Ben Shibe, who has amassed a fortune from the making of baseballs, was induced by Ban Johnson, president of the American League, to put up the sinews of war in Philadelphia, Mack was turned over to him as the manager of the Athletics. Johnson knew Mack intimately and was sure that he would score a success, for the excellent reason that Shibe was only too willing to allow the manager to have his own way in everything.

Absolute authority generally contributes to the success of a baseball manager and Mack, having undisputed sway, has won three American league championships. The first pennant was captured by the Athletics in 1902, when Mack moulded a winner with such players as Plank, Waddell and Hastings, pitchers; Schreck and Powers, catchers; Harry Davis, Dan Murphy, Monte Cross and Lave Cross, infielders, and Hartzel, Fultz and Seybold in the outfield.

In 1905 Mack had another pennant winner, which included not only Plank, Waddell, Schreck, Powers, Davis, Murphy, the Crosses, Seybold and Hartzel, but also Bender, the redskin; Coawley, Jack Knight, now with the Highlanders; Danny Hoffman and Briscoe Lord. This team, however, was beaten by the Giants in the world's series, chiefly because of the wonderful pitching of Mathewson and McGinnity.

SOME PAST PLAYERS

Looking over the new American league champions, it will be seen that Waddell, Schreck, Powers, the Crosses, Seybold, Hofman, Coakley, and Knight are missing, but that Mack still banks on Plank, a star lefthand pitcher; Davis, the veteran first baseman; Murphy, the heavy-hitting outfielder; Bender, the great Indian twirler.

Around these veterans Mack has plated some of the finest young players in the profession; Eddie Collins, the Columbia boy who is a star second baseman and a rival of Ty Cobb for base-stealing honors; Baker, the best third baseman in either of the big leagues; Barry, a speedy shortstop; Rube Oldring, a New Yorker who has develops dinto a crack hitter and outfielder; pitchers Coombs and Morgan, who have been important factors in the success of this year's team, and catchers Thomas Livingston and Lapp.

To Mack alone belongs the credit for developing these young players. His success is due to many reasons. In the first place he knows every angle of scientific modern baseball. Then again he is an incomparable judge of young material. He is even-tempered, fair in his treatment of the players and a clever student of human nature. He cannot be hoodwinked and is a disciplinarian, yet he seldom is compelled to reprimand a player for his conduct.

"Do your best for me and you'll be rewarded!" is Mack's everyday admonition. "If you don't make good there are other players ready to jump into your shoes."

In a word, Mack is a strong advocate of harmony and energy, but he is not a believer in rowdy aggressiveness. He insists upon clean baseball all the time, always figuring that decisions o fumpires even up in the long run. Mack has grown wealthy in the employ of Shibe. He draws a fig salary and is a stockbroker in the club.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

In the Intermediate Basketball League the Jolliers defeated the Quakers with a score of 11 to 9. This was a fast game. The score in the game between the Hustlers and the Joshers was 17-10 in favour of the Hustlers.

The class in First Aid to the Injured will meet for organization on the evening of Wednesday, October 26th at 9 o'clock sharp. Any men wanting to take that course who have not yet enrolled would do well to hand in their names at the office at once. This is one very important line of work. The only way to be Johnny on the spot is to know how to act in an emergency. Be sure to be present next Wednesday evening after gym. class.

The Century Hikers' Club left the building this afternoon at 1.15 and are now back among the tall timbers.

The rugby game which had been arranged between the Junior Y.M.C.A. team and the Lakefield school had to be called off because of the fact that Mr. McKenzie could not be present.

The Junior Basketball League opened this morning with three fast games as follows: Maples vs. Midgets; Athletics vs. Tigers; Beavers vs. Cubs.

A TELESCOPE

Presented to the Astronomical Society by Hon. J. R. Stratton

Through the kindness of Hon. Mr. Stratton, the Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada has been the recipient of a gift which represents very great assistance to its researches. He has made the Society a present of one of the best three-inch telescopes.

The new telescope is especially equipped for solar observation. It can be adjusted so that the intense solar heat and light are so neutralized as not to affect the eyes painfully or injuriously. It also has a device—by the use of which the stars in the zenith can be studied without the painful crick in the neck, which comes when the ordinary apparatus are not supplemented by a device like that mentioned. Not only has the new telescope these distinguishing features, but it has a power that will bring stars of the ninth magnitude within range of vision for practical purposes.

The Society very heartily appreciates Mr. Stratton's gift as a most excellent one, both for its intrinsic, as well as astronomical value; it will prove a most valuable aid to the members of the Society in the prosecution of their studies, as well as in the entertainment of those whose interest in the heavens is less didactic—by the convenient access to the wonders of the starry skies.

The Society expects soon to hold its inaugural meeting of the season in Peterborough on November 4th, in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute, at which the presence of the new telescope and Prof. DeLury, of Toronto University, will be leading features of interest. Prof. DeLury's address will be on the subject "The Astronomy of To-day." Admission is free and the public is cordially invited.

A MOTHER'S ADVICE TO OTHER MOTHERS

Mrs. Nicholas Breau, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I can highly recommend Baby's Own Tablets to all mothers whose little ones are constipated. I gave my little girl the Tablets and they regulated her bowels and now she sleeps well, eats well, is fat and good all the time. I am really delighted with the Tablets and I always keep them in the house and as soon as my little girl becomes troubled or feverish I give her the Tablets and she is soon well again. Please send me another box for they are the very best medicine I know of for little ones." The Tablets are sold under a guarantee to contain nothing injurious to even the youngest child. Sold at 25 cents a box by all medicine dealers or from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SPLENDID LECTURE BY REV. FATHER O'SULLIVAN

formation is not Catholic yet there is much of the Catholic spirit about it due to the conservative character of the English people and because its roots were struck deep in Catholic soil. "The Catholic Spirit", says Brother Azarias, 'still lingers in the cloistered aisles and corridors of Oxford. It hovers over the vacant tomb of Edward the Confessor. It speaks in tower and pillared dome throughout the land. It breathes in the Catholic prayers still preserved in the Book of Common Prayer. It has become transfused into some of the noblest passages in Paradise Lost; it is our Catholic heritage of thought and sentiment that has inspired some of the sublimest passages in our Wordsworths and Tennysons, our Longfellows and Lowells. And whatever Shakespeare may have been in practice the whole spirit of his immortal plays Catholic."

Modern Catholic literature in England dates from the Oxford movement in the middle of the last century. The work begun by Wiseman, Manning, Newman and Faber has been continued with unabated zeal. The best Catholic books published to-day come to us from England. In this country we have a literature of which we may well be proud, to which Catholic lady writers have contributed very largely. While their writings inspire noble ideals from a literary standpoint they measure up to the canons of the most exacting critic.

The Rev. lecturer exhorted the ladies to avail themselves of the excellent them something to think about and to talk about would afford them pleasure for good reading would give works in the library. A cultivated asset company and great pleasure for the pleasures of the intelligence are the highest in the natural order and might we not hope he concluded that some of the bright young ladies of Peterborough with the opportunities that they have at their disposal might add their quota to our Canadian literature and following in the footsteps of Agnes Strickland, Mrs. Moody and Catharine Traill perpetuate the literary traditions of their native country.

After the conclusion of the lecture Mr. Robert Begley, President, of St. Peter's T.A.S., and Alderman Duffus, ascended the platform, and Mr. Begley spoke as follows:—

Rev. Father O'Sullivan,—About eleven years ago you conceived the idea, or more properly speaking, God inspired you with the idea, of organizing a Temperance Society in our midst. Although not destined to remain long with us, your efforts bore excellent fruit, and we have to-day two flourishing societies in our city, both doing excellent work. Branches have also grown up in the neighbouring parishes of Hamilton, Gatineau, Campbellford, Belleville and Trenton. So you see, dear Father, your early efforts have borne good results. Many human lives have been rendered happy before there was anything but turmoil and poverty. Moved by even the humblest of these results you would in our behalf, if not for us, accept this great picture of the good providence of this country as a small token of the esteem in which we hold you, and we hope it will often remind you of the many devoted members you have left in the city. (Applause.)

vote to the meeting expressed his personal obligation to Father O'Sullivan and on behalf of the Society extended [illegible] and Rev. Father O'Brien a

The singing of the N[illegible] them concluded the most successful meeting in the annals of the Ladies' Literary.

Rev. Father O'Sullivan was deeply moved at this spontaneous tribute. It was certainly an agreeable surprise to him, he said, and his heart would indeed be cold if he did not feel grateful for the kindly thought that prompted this graceful act. They gave him the credit of founding their Society, but really that was very little. It was easy enough to found it—the real work was to keep it going and growing, and that it had grown and prospered beyond their fondest hopes was due not to him but to Dr. O'Brien and Father McColl. Their's was the credit if credit there was. But it seemed to him the success of the Society was no man's work—it was God's work (Applause). In his part if he had done anything in being God's instrument in establishing the Society he felt that he was more than rewarded by the prayers of the mothers and the sisters of those who had been saved from the curse of drink. He would always treasure this picture and he thanked the Society most sincerely for such a mark of their appreciation.

A vote of thanks to Father O'Sullivan was moved by Mr. Murty. They knew, he said, when Father O'Sullivan spoke it was well worth listening to and to-night he had lived up to that reputation. He was glad to see so many men present. Heretofore they had not supported the Ladies' Literary Society as well as they might have done. One reason for that, it seemed to him, was the insufficiency of accommodation in their old quarters. This reason no longer existed, however. In this hall they had ample room for all and he hoped they would come in increasing numbers to each literary meeting.

The vote of thanks was seconded by Mr. W. S. Merrill.

Rev. Dr. O'Brien said he felt honoured to associate himself with the vote of thanks. He was glad to be with them that evening for many reasons. He was glad to have an opportunity of hearing Father O'Sullivan because he knew from past experience that he would give them a scholarly and interesting address. He was glad also to be associated with this presentation to Father O'Sullivan. With all his modest depreciation of self, Father O'Sullivan could not conceal from them the fact that he was the founder of the Temperance movement in Peterborough.

Father O'Sullivan said the time was opportune in 1900. The opportunity was always there, said Dr. O'Brien, but it waited the man. At their anniversary celebration last January they had inscribed on their books the names of over a thousand of the men of Peterborough. A thousand was a big number, but if it had not been for the seventy-five that gathered around Father O'Sullivan in 1900 they never would have had the thousand. The society was the work of God. He had planted, Apollos had watered, God had given the increase. Father O'Sullivan had sown the seed and without that sowing they could not have harvest. He was also glad to renew acquaintance with the Ladies' Literary Society. He considered the society a very necessary adjunct to the men's organization, and he was thinking seriously of establishing a Ladies' Literary Society in connection with his own branch of the Sacred Heart. (Applause).

Rev. Father McColl also associated himself with the vote of thanks. He was glad their meeting had proved a success, and he counselled them to keep up their enthusiasm. He hoped they would profit by the splendid address they had heard from Father O'Sullivan and to put to good advantage the opportunities they had in the society for self-improvement and self-culture. There was one thing especially he wished to impress upon them. He wanted them to remember that Catholic literature, as Father O'Sullivan said put to good advantage inferior to purely secular literature. Some of the most famous writers of all times were Catholics and even their writers who were not Catholic in their ideas, all their most beautiful ideas were Catholic. Milton was the only really great poet for a hundred years of the reformation and Milton was inspired by the great Italian Catholic, Dante. They contemplated very large additions to their library in the near future themselves and he exhorted the members of the Society to avail themselves of it to the full.

Rev. Father Kelly then in putting the

Free Test of Hobberlin Suitings at LeBrun's

EVERY MAN who can possibly do so should attend the "free tests" of Hobberlin Suitings and Overcoatings, which will be in full swing at the store of H. LeBrun & Co.—one day only—
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25
The machine used for this purpose is the same as that used by the British Government in testing the cloth for the army. The big tailoring house of Hobberlin makes use of it in buying their clothes from the mills. This store has secured the machine in order to give the men of this city an idea of the textile strength of the clothes we are selling in the Suitings and Overcoatings for this Fall. It is a splendid way of determining exactly the strength of the materials you are buying.
An Opportunity of this kind is decidedly rare and all who can possibly do so should visit the store while the "Free Tests" are in progress.

CRIPPEN TO HANG NOV. 8TH INSTEAD OF ON THE 14TH

Date Was Changed to Suit the Convenience of the Prison Authorities—Counsel Will Make Every Effort to Prevent the Execution—Miss Leneve is Very Ill in Prison as the Result of Verdict.

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 24.—Dr. Hawley Crippen's already short shift was officially made shorter this morning, when Lord Alverstone signed the death warrant making November 8th as the date for the hanging, instead of November 14th. This was done to suit the convenience of the prison authorities. When the condemned man was asked this morning if he wanted spiritual advice he said he was more interested in justice than in priests. His counsel will make every effort to prevent the execution. Miss Leneve is prostrated and very ill in prison as theresult of the Crippen verdict and sentence. Her trial as accessory is slated for to-morrow.

BOYS CHARGED WITH THEFT ARE CAUGHT AFTER A HOT CHASE AT THE STATION

Are Accused of Having Broken Into the Store of Jas. Edgar and Taking Goods to the Value of $20—Appeared in Court This Morning and Were Remanded for a Week.

One of our citizens drank too much of the stuff that cheers on Saturday, and landed in the police court this morning. It was his first offence, however, so he was let go, after he received a warning and good advice from Magistrate Dumble.

Laverne Killingbeck and Garnet Innis had a game of tag with Constables Newhall and Meagher at the C.P.R. station just as the 4.38 train came in, on Saturday afternoon. They appeared in court this morning on a charge of breaking into James Edgar's store on the night of Oct. 20th and taking goods therefrom to the value of $20. They did not plead or elect and the case was remanded for a week. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared on behalf of the young men.

It appears that on Saturday afternoon the police got hold of information leading to the fact that the prisoners were to be at the station, and Officers Meagher and Newhall went down and hid behind some box cars on the Central Milling Co's siding. They espied the young men coming along, and kept a keen eye on their movements. They seemed to be trying to get in touch with some person at the station. However, when the train came in the officers went over to the station and were close to the fugitives before they were aware of their danger. Killingbeck bolted, when the officers appeared, and ran around some box cars with his chum close at his heels and the officers bringing up the rear. It was a hot race around the cars, and the passengers and others standing on the platform had great sport at the expense of the contestants. It was not for long, however. The boys saw they could not possibly make much out of running around the cars, so one of them ran over and tried to mix up with the crowd on the platform, but he was nabbed by P. C. Meagher. The other fellow ran across by the gateman, who made a vain attempt to grab him, he ran through the freight shed and down to the creek. He ran along the creek and away down near the packing house. In the meantime Constable Newhall ran down the street and was in wait for him at the bridge. The result was, that just as he felt a little bit safe, P. C. Newhall stepped out and collared him.

Both young men have records, one of them serving a term in the Central. $500 bail was asked and two sureties of $250 each or $250 in cash. If they do not supply the bail they when they will again appear before who nthey will again appear before Magistrate Dumble.

RECORDS BROKEN AT BIG AVIATION MEET

BELMONT PARK, N.Y., OCT. 24.—This was a perfect day for the aviation meet and there were thousands here to see the best aviators of the world do their tricks. Several records were broken in aeroplanes and biplanes doing rapid work, flying manoeuvring around a course. The way they cut corners in midair was a startling spectacle; some preferred flying at one altitude, some at another, but the greatest speed was developed by Auburn, who put on nearly sixty miles an hour.

Local Chicle Co. Ask Board Of Works For A Free Site For New Factory

The Board of Works on Saturday evening took up briefly the Canadian Chicle Company's request for a site, as the land the company has in view is a part of the lots which the south end pumping station is being erected. The Chicle people only require a lot 50 x 100 ft., upon which to erect a building 35 x 70 feet, four stories high. They do not require to extend back to the railway tracks. While guaranteeing to employ thirty hands to start with, they expect this number will increase to 125 employees in the very near future. The company have been advised that there is no possible hope for them securing a free site, and the Board of Works and Manufacturers' committee will offer them a lot at as nominal a price as possible. It has been suggested that they be offered a site to the north of the pumping station lot, and some of the aldermen will visit the locality this morning at nine o'clock and report at to-night's meeting.

Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.
BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS
Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nine-tenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

CHURCH DEFENCES OF THE CITY

The opening of the large, beautiful and substantial new church of All Saints to public worship, marks an epoch not only in the growth and progress of the religious interests it represents, but in the church life of the city. It is one of seven new church structure built within the past two or three years or practically in course of construction. The fact that five and possibly six of these are built or to be built in the south ward, testifies to the great growth of this part of the city.

Has any one remarked how strong a line of entrenchment, the now strong a line of defence against the forces of evil, in the western part of the city, the churches are. If the churches were as strongly in line as combative forces as they are materially, the city would be safe from attack from the west or east or north or south or from below. Has anyone noted that from Brock street in the north to Romaine street south, there is a line of churches stretching north and south at fairly evenly distributed distances, and all on the line of the breadth of a city square — between Rubidge and Reid streets. We have St. Andrew's facing Brock street and extending to Reid street; we have St. Peter's cathedral on Rubidge, facing Hunter street and Reid street, we have the Charlotte street Methodist, practically facing Reid street; we have the new All Saints' church, facing Rubidge street and extending back to Reid street; we have the new Knox church, facing Rubidge street and extending back to Reid street; and we have Park street Baptist in line with an extension of Rubidge street.

The line of defence on the east consists of St. Luke's, in its elevated position, as an outpost of the second line of defence, and exposed to bear the first brunt of attack. Near at hand we have the Mark street Methodist church; and we have almost in line from north to south; Grace Methodist church in the extreme north; George street Methodist church, Murray street Baptist church, Bethany Tabernacle, St. Paul's, St. John's, the church of the Sacred Heart and St. James' church. Peterborough has great reason to be proud of her endowment of elegant and substantial church structures, and this reason will be strengthened by the erection of the new Charlotte street Methodist and Murray street Baptist churches, both decided upon and practically in the first stages of construction. The problem is to fill the churches we have. ample as the present provision is, the accommodation would have to be doubled if all who should go to church would go to church.

PROGRESSIVE GOVERNMENT VINDICATED.

On Friday last a notable gathering was held at Sault Ste. Marie, to celebrate the establishment of four immense new plants, representing the expenditure of six millions of dollars. This is three times the amount of the loan guaranteed by the Ross government in 1903, to put the then moribund Soo industries upon their feet. This is not only remarkable as justifying the foresight and enterprising policy of the government of that day, but as compelling acknowledgment of this justification by political opponents who were the most bitter opponents of a course of action that has been followed by the most splendid results. On the occasion of the celebration, the Whitney government was represented by Hon. Mr. Hanna, who, in the Legislature six years previously was one of the most aggressive and active opponents of the loan guarantee. In the course of his speech at the Soo on Friday, Mr. Hanna is reported in explanation of his position upon one important point: "his opposition to the Ross Government's extending a saving hand to the "Soo" industries in their time of trouble." Mr. Hanna expressed his pleasure at the happy result of the action he so vigorously opposed in 1904. He admitted that events had justified the Ross Government's faith, but declared that if he had the matter to consider again under the circumstances that obtained six years ago, his course would be the same." Continuing he said:

"Notwithstanding that this was so," he added, "I congratulate you and the Province that what was done on that occasion did not result in financial loss to either. I congratulate you and the Province that the difficulties of that day have been so happily solved, so far as the well-being of the enterprises themselves and the town of Sault Ste. Marie are concerned. I congratulate you on the arrangement which transferred the ownership of these great and valuable properties to the powerful and wealthy corporation which now controls them, and whose breadth of view and efficiency of management are manifested in the wide-reaching schemes which are now being worked out and in the abounding success of the company to-day.

"What greater boon could we have at the present time than that this great enterprise, with British capital to the east, and growing Canada to the west, should serve to bring together and thus hasten the development of this Province and of this Dominion?"

Hon. Mr. Hanna said a great deal when he said in respect of his opposition to the guarantee that "if he had the matter to consider again, under the circumstances that obtained six years ago, his course would be the same."

"Very naturally it would be the same. His connection with a government whose leader has his past littered with opposition to progressive legislation and administration, makes such a position logical. And his personal relation to the Soo gauarantee proposal in 1903, gives further justification for his position. It was more than shrewdly suspected that on that occasion the present provincial secretary submbersed his representative capacity into his professional capacity. He was described at that time as professionally—he is a lawyer— in the pay of the United States steel corporation, which lusted to lay hands upon the Soo industries, which threatened to be a rival, in steel production, to the Trust. This explained his attitude of opposition to the guarantee. If the Soo industries had collapsed and had been allowed to fall into the hands of the Steel Trust, we should have had no steel industries, either there or in the east, and the industrial status of Canada would have had a fatal set-back. It is more frank than creditable in Mr. Hanna to say that if he had another chance he would work as hard to turn over the steel industry of Canada to the United States octopus. His Pecksniffian expression of interest, in the success of the Soo industries will deceive nobody.

He did well to say that the immense industries of the Soo justified the action of the Ross government in giving the guarantee. There are other instances in which their progressive policies have been justified and Mr. Whitney's attitude of opposition discredited. He denounced the pulp concession of the Ross government as "the most colossal steal." Yet these concessions were the foundation of the Soo industries where now about twenty millions of capital are fruitfully engaged in the development of our natural resources. They were the starting point of a railway which now pierces deep into an unbroken wilderness of industrial resources, and is headed for Hudson Bay to gather in other millions of natural resources.

The great Spanish River Pulp and Paper Works at Espanola are another concrete evidence of the foresight and enterprise of the Ross government and of the partizan myopia of Mr. Whitney and his friends. He and his party opposed the succession dues, and other sources of revenue, of which the present government is reaping the moral advantage, and of which the province would also reap the material advantage, if extravagance, which had increased at annual expenditure of four millions in the Ross period to nearly ten millions in the Whitney period, were not quite so rampant. Mr. Whitney and his friends opposed the opening up of New Ontario and the building by the Ross government of the provincial railway, which has become the greatest source of provincial enrichment and expansion in the history of the province. The people do not yet realize the debt they owe to the Ross government, which launched against the opposition of Mr. Whitney and his friends a development policy which has produced great results and is capable of yielding, under progressive administration of provincial affairs, continuously greater results. Nor do the people yet perhaps, fully appreciate how great loss the province escaped by the failure of the timid, obcaped by the failure of the timid, obposition of Mr. Whitney and his political allies.

PILES Dr. Chase's Ointment

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

ADVANCING THE SCHOOL AGE.

The Brantford Expositor has the following:

The Peterborough Examiner thinks that before the age limit for compulsory school attendance is raised to 16, in this province, there ought to be a proper enforcement of the law requiring all children to be at school until they are 14 years of age. The argument sounds plausible, but because a large percentage of our children evade the Truancy Law is no reason why the still larger percentage who would not evade it should be deprived of the advantage which the lengthening of the school term would be to them.

The reasoning of the Expositor sounds plausible, but it is to be borne in mind that if it is difficult to enforce the Truancy Act in respect of young children, the value of whose services to their parents does not present so much temptation to keep them from school, enforcement of the law in respect of older children whose services are of some value, will be much more difficult. Besides, we have to consider the pertinence of the general principle involved in the fact that multiplication of laws that are not given adequate enforcement tends to generate contempt for all law. If we neglect to give effect to one law of comparatively easy enforcement, how can one expect to enforce another law which will develop a much stronger opposition from parents, who will have, to their minds, greater reasons for evading its provisions. A law advancing the age of compulsory attendance to 16 years would very probably be as great in failure in the matter of enforcement as the present law. The present Provincial government has achieved an unenviable reputation for general laxity of law enforcement and administration of justice. To pass a new law would only enlarge their opportunity.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN.

The trouble is that people do not tell enough truth before they are married and too much after.

Table Manners.

American men are good workers. They see their wives and children but little except at table. That seems to be about the only family gathering. What a spectacle is the common management of these family meetings?

The father sits in glum silence, and shovels in as fast as he can swallow. The children follow the parental example. The food is passed only when asked for, and is then passed in silence.

There is nothing human about it. We cannot see in what essential particular it differs from a group of pigs gathered about a trough.

If these gatherings were rightly managed; if the experiences of the children in their schools were lovingly called out by parental interest; if such news as the parents had picked up since the last meeting were told—if this were the scene at the table three times a day it would grow by what it feeds on. The table meeting would be more attractive to the small people. The parents would grow into a loving oneness with their children. It would in truth prove the greatest blessing to every member of the group, and in the long run would contribute more to the physical, intellectual, social and moral development of the young people than any other agency can name.

Upward and Onward.

Keep the heart pure and the brain active. Study for the best and when you have found it, work and study for something still better. Never be satisfied with one good act—nor a hundred—nor a thousand. But add them together one after the other till at last you will have a string of pearls to lift you higher, instead of pebbles to sink you lower. Hearts, like houses, can be built out. Minds, like houses, can be beautified. It is as easy to plant a noble ambition as to plant soulid desires and trees which bear only bitter fruit. Remember that if is little by little, inch by inch, but the work of the man becomes a mansion. This is the way the poet, boy becomes the great man. This is the way the apprentice becomes the master, and the intelligence of mortals the power and unknown greatness of those who are immortal. Build your walls of good material and they will last. Be kind to the poor, for every good act is a plant that will bear blossoms to our credit in the beautiful beyond.

Christ Loved Home.

Though too poor to have a home of His own, He went out to spend the equal to six or seven ordinary miles, walk from Jerusalem, and over a rough and hilly road that made it equal to six or seven ordinary miles, every morning and night going to and fro. He loved the quietude of home life, and He was lovely in His domesticity.

Now He enjoyed handing over the resurrected boy to his mother and the resurrected girl to her father and reconstructing homesteads which disease or death was breaking up! As the song "Home, Sweet Home" was written by a man who at that time had no home, so we think the homelessness of Christ added to his appreciation of domesticity.

Furthermore, He was lovely in His sympathies. Now dropsy is a most distressful complaint. It inflames and swells and tortures any limb or physical organ it touches. As soon as a case of that kind is submitted to Christ, He, without any use of diaphoretics, commands its cure. And what an eye doctor He was for opening the long closed gates of sight to the blue of the sky, and the yellow of the flower and the emerald of the grass! What a Christ He was for cooling fevers without so much as a spoonful of febrifuge and straightening crooked backs with out any pangs of surgery, and standing whole choirs of music along the silent galleries of a deaf ear, and giving healthful nervous system to cataleptics! Sympathy! He did not give them stoical advice or philosophize about the science of grief. He sat down and cried with them.

A Mother's Care.

A woman gifted at tuning "grab bag" socials called on a mother saying "We have many useless articles that must be disposed of somehow. We've concluded to place them all onone table under the charge of our most fascinating young ladies. Gentlemen will chat with them, they cannot go away without buying something and the ladies can put their own prices on the articles. We really want your daughter she has such winning ways." Seeing indignation gathering in the noble mother's face and knowing how carefully she had guarded her children from social contamination she added, "Of course she will have to play the agreeable to a good many you might not approve; still she need not recognize them afterward." "What" exclaimed the mother, "allow my daughter to become a decoy to lure money out of men's pockets in return for shams and false smiles? Never. I hold my child's moral nature too sacred for that.

We would say to all: Use your gentlest voice at home. Watch it day by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in days to come than the best pearl laid in the sea. A kind voice is joy like a lark's song, to a hearth at home. It is a light that sings as well as shines. Train it to sweet tones now, and it will keep in tune through life.

Fight Of Forestry Branch Against Forest Fires

The annual report of the Superintendent of Forestry, which forms part of the annual report of the Department of the Interior, lately issued, shows that the Dominion Forest Service is year by year enlarging its staff of fire-fighters and steadily getting into better shape its means of protecting the public forests within its jurisdiction.

During the year 1909 the number of fire rangers employed was 96, as against 47 during the previous year. Nearly half of these (45, to wit) were employed in patrolling the Rocky Mountain country from the International boundary up to the Peace, Athabasca and Lesser Slave regions. The Railway Belt in British Columbia was guarded by 37 rangers, while in Saskatchewan 14 were employed. As in most previous years the largest number of fires—those, at least, whose causes were known — arose from the building and operation of railways. Next to these settlers clearing land and burning brush were most culpable, while campers and travellers were also to blame for a very large proportion of the fires.

Constant patrolling of all places where danger exists is the chief means taken for the prevention of fires. As opportunity offers, this is supplemented, especially on the forest reserves, the comparatively limited areas of which give better opportunities for careful fire protection. On Shuswan Lake, B. C., for instance, a gasoline launch is used, which serves not only to enable the ranger to cover his beat more quickly, but in case of a serious fire would prove invaluable in getting men and supplies to the scene of the fire expeditiously. On the forest reserves fire-guards are made along the boundaries and along the lines of railway passing through the reserves. Some of these guards are made by burning the grass and other herbage at the season when the snow has disappeared from the surrounding cultivated districts and before it has gone from the forest, so that there is no danger to the latter. Ploughed guards are also made. Roads are being constructed in the reserves, which not only make it possible to get men to a fire more quickly in order to fight it, but also serve to stop small fires and in case of larger fires give a base from which to "backfire."

Special attention has also been given to the problem presented by fires arising from the construction and operation of railways. The patrol along the route of the G.T.P. during its construction west of Edmonton has been very successful. During the two years of construction work not one serious fire has occurred along the right-of-way. The prevention of fires along the railway due to sparks from engines is another very serious matter. In some places in the forest reserves the railways have been compelled to make fire guards along their right of way. Efforts are also being made to get the railways to clear up the brush from their lines. One western railway this spring had a fire arising from their neglect to follow the instructions of the branch in this regard and lost several miles of valuable timber through the fire which started from brush along their track having been ignited by fire from the engine.

During the year reported on a complaint was laid against the Great Northern Railway Commission for starting fires along its lines in British Columbia. The Railway Commission has also been requested to give authority to officers of the fire ranging staff to examine locomotives at divisional points in order to see that they have the equipment of spark-arresters, etc.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"You see, Mr. Ducaine," he began. "I am not a man who makes idle promises. I am here to offer you employment, if you are open to accept a post of some importance, and also, to be frank with you, of some danger."

"If I am qualified for the post, your Grace," I answered, "I shall be only too willing to do my best. But you must excuse me if I express exactly what is in my mind. I am almost a stranger to you. I am a complete stranger to Lord Chelsford. How can you rely upon my trustworthiness? You must have so many young men to choose from who are personally known to you. Why do you come to me?"

The Duke smiled grimly.

"In the first place," he said, "we are only strangers from the personal point of view, which is possibly an advantage. I have in my pocket a close record of your days since you entered the university. I know those who have been your friends, your tastes, how you have spent your time. Don't be foolish, young sir," he added sharply, as he saw the colour rise in my cheeks; "you will have a trust reposed in you such as few men have ever borne before. This prying into your life is from no motives of private curiosity. Wait until you hear the importance of the things which I am going to say to you."

I was impressed into silence.

"You have heard, my young friend," he said, "of the Committee of National Defence?"

"I have read of it," I answered.

"Good! This committee has been formed and sanctioned by the War Office in consequence of the shocking revelations of inefficiency which came to light during the recent war. It occurred to the Prime Minister, as I dare say it did to most of the thinking men in the country, that if our unreadiness to take the offensive was so obvious, it was possible that our defensive precautions had also been neglected. A board was therefore formed to act independently of all existing institutions, and composed chiefly of military and naval men. The Commander-in-Chief, Lord Chelsford, Colonel Ray, and myself are amongst the members. Our mandate is to keep our attention solely fixed upon the defences of the country, to elaborate different schemes for repelling methods of attack, and in short to make ourselves responsible to the country for the safety of the Empire. Every harbour on the south and east coast is supposed to be known to us, every yard of railway feeding the seaports from London, all the secret fortifications and places south of London, capable of being held by inferior forces. The mobilization of troops to any one point has been gone thoroughly into, and every possible movement and combination of the fleet. These are only a few of the things which have become our care, but they are sufficient for the purpose of illustration. The importance of this Board must be apparent to you; also the importance of absolute secrecy as regards its doings and movements."

I was fascinated by the greatness of the subject. However, I answered him as quickly as possible, and emphatically.

"The Board," the Duke continued, "has been meeting in London. For the last few months we have had business of the utmost importance on hand. But on January 10, that is just six weeks ago, we came to a full stop. The Commander-in-Chief had no alternative but temporarily to dissolve the assembly. We found ourselves in a terrible and disastrous position. Lord Ronald Matheson had been acting as secretary for us. We met always with locked doors, and the names of the twelve members of the Board are the most honoured in England. Yet twenty-four hours after our meetings a verbatim report of them, with full particulars of all our schemes, was in the hands of the French Secret Service."

"Good God!" I exclaimed, startled for the moment out of my respectful silence.

The Duke himself seemed affected by the revelation which he had made. He sat forward in his chair with puckered brows and bent head. His voice, which had been growing lower and lower, had sunk almost to a whisper. It seemed to me that he made a sign to Lord Chelsford to continue. Almost for the first time the man who had done little since his entrance save watch me, spoke.

"My own political career, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "has been a long one, but I have never before found myself confronted with such a situation. Even you can doubtfully realize its effect. The whole good of our work is undone. If we cannot recommence, and with different results, I am afraid, as an Englishman, to say what may happen. War between England and France to-day would be like a great game of chess between two masters of equal strength—one having a secret knowledge of his opponent's each ensuing move. You can guess what the end of that would be. Our only hope is at once to reconstruct our plans. We are hard at it now by day and by night, but the time has arrived when we can go no further without a meeting, and the actual committal to paper and diagram of our new schemes. We have discussed the whole matter most carefully, and we have come to the following decision: We have reduced the number of the Board by half, those who have resigned, with certain exceptions, having done so by ballot. We have decided that instead of holding our meetings at the War Office they shall take place down here at the Duke's house, and so far as possible, secretly. Then, as regards the secretaryship. No shadow of suspicion rests upon Lord Ronald any more than upon his predecessors, but as you may have read in the newspapers, he has temporarily lost his reason owing to the shock, and has been obliged to go to a private home. We have decided to engage some one absolutely without political connexions, and whose detachment from political life must be complete. You have had a warm advocate in Colonel Mostyn Ray, and, subject to some stringent and absolute conditions, I may say that we have decided to offer you the post."

I looked from one to the other. I have no doubt that I looked as bewildered as I felt.

"I am a complete stranger to all of you," I murmured. "I am not deserving in any way of such a position."

Lord Chelsford smiled.

"You underrate yourself, young man," he said drily, "or your college professors have wandered from the truth. Still, your surprise is natural, I admit. I will explain a little further. Our choice is more limited than you might think. At least fifty names were proposed, all of them of young men of the highest character. Each one, however, had some possibly doubtful relative or association or custom in life. It is evident that there is treachery somewhere in the very highest quarters. These young men were sure to be brought into contact with it. Now, it was Ray's idea to seek for some one wholly outside the diplomatic world, living in a spot remote from London, with as few friends as possible, who would have no sentimental objections to the surveillance of detectives. You appear to us to be suitable.

"It is a wonderful offer!" I exclaimed.

"In a sense it is," Lord Chelsford continued. "The remuneration, of course, will be high, but the post itself may not be a permanency, and you will live all the time at high pressure. The Duke will place a small house at your disposal, and it will be required that you form no new acquaintances without reference to him, nor must you leave this place on any account without permission. You will virtually be a prisoner, and if certain of my suspicions are correct you may even find the post one of great physical danger. On the other hand you will have a thousand a year salary, and a sum of five thousand pounds in two years' time if all is well."

Excitement seemed to have steadied my nerves. I forgot all the minor tragedies which had been real enough things to face only a few hours ago. I spoke calmly and decisively.

"I accept, Lord Chelsford," I shall count my life a small thing indeed against my fidelity."

He drummed idly with his forefinger upon the table. His eyes were wandering around the room absently. His face was calm and expressionless.

"Very well, then," he said, "my business here is settled. I shall leave it with the Duke to acquaint you with the practical details of your work, and our arrangement."

He rose to his feet. The Duke glanced at his watch.

"You have only just time for the train," he remarked. "The car shall take you there. I prefer to walk back, and I have something further to say to Mr. Ducaine."

Lord Chelsford took leave of me briefly, and the Duke, after accompanying him outside, returned to his former seat. I ventured upon an incoherent attempt to express my gratitude, which he at once waved aside. He leaned over the table, and he fixed his eyes steadfastly upon me.

"I am able now," he said, "to ask you a question postponed from the other day. It is concerning the man who was found in the creek."

His merciless eyes noted my start.

"Ah!" he continued. "I can see that you know something. I have my suspicions about this man. You can now understand my interest when I hear of strangers in the neighbourhood. I do not believe that he was a derelict from the sea. Do you?"

"No," I answered.

He nodded.

"Am I right," he said, "in presuming that you know he was not?"

"I know that he was not," I admitted.

His fingers ceased their beating upon the table. His face became white and masklike.

"Go on," he said.

"I know that he came through Brasted, and he asked for me. He looked in through the window of my cottage when Colonel Ray was with me. I saw him no more after that until I found him dead."

"Ray left you after you had seen this man's face at the window?"

"Yes."

"The wounds about the man's head and body. If he was not thrown up by the sea, can you explain them?"

"No," I answered with a shudder.

"At the inquest it was not mentioned, I think, that he had been seen in the village?"

"It was not," I admitted. "Most of the people were at Colonel Ray's lecture. He spoke to one girl, a Miss Moyat."

"She did not give evidence."

"I thought," I said in a low tone, "that she had better not."

"Did you hear anything after Ray left?" he asked suddenly.

I could have cried out, but my tongue seemed dry in my throat.

"There was a sound," I muttered, "I fancied that it was a cry. But I could not tell. The wind was blowing and the sea and rain! No, I could not tell."

He rose up.

"You appear," he said drily, "to have discretion. Cultivate it! It is a great gift. I shall look for you at eleven o'clock in the morning. I am having a large house party this week and amongst them will be our friends."

He left me without any further fare well, and turned slowly homewards. When we reached the bend in the road he paused, and remained there for several moments motionless. His eyes were fixed upon the small creek. He seemed to be measuring the distance between it and the road. He was still lingering there when I closed the door.

CHAPTER IX.

TREACHERY.

The sunlight was streaming through the window when at last my pen ceased to move. I rubbed my eyes and looked out in momentary amazement. Morning had already broken across the sea. My green-shaded lamp was burning with a sickly light. The moon had turned pale and colourless whilst I sat at my desk.

I stretched myself and, lighting a cigarette, commenced to collect my papers. Immediately a dark figure rose from a couch in the farther corner of the room and approached me.

"Can I get you anything, sir?"

I turned in my chair. The manservant whom the Duke had put in charge of the "Brand," my present habitation, and who remained with me always in the room while I worked, stood at my elbow.

"I would like some coffee, Grooton," I said. "I am going to walk up to the house with these papers, and I shall want a bath and some breakfast directly I get back."

"Very good, sir. It shall be ready. I folded up the sheets and maps, and placing them in an oilskin, tied them round my body under my waistcoat. Then I withdrew all the cartridges save one from the revolver, which had lain all night within easy reach of my right hand, and slipped it into my pocket.

"Coffee ready, Grooton?"

"In one moment, sir."

The Patient Brain

A Tireless Worker So Long as Supplied With Rich, Red Blood.

The brain is one of the most patient and industrious organs of the body. It can be induced, by good treatment, to perform prodigies of work.

But it is sensitive and will not brook abuse. It responds to the lash at first, but if the lash is laid on too hard it balks.

The brain insists on having plenty of good, red blood wherewith to renew its waste and from which to manufacture the nerve force supplied to the whole body.

Nervous trouble is generally brain trouble, and no suffering is to be compared to mental suffering, with the accompanying dread, suspicion and melancholy.

One-fifth of the blood in the human body is consumed by the brain, so make the blood rich and red by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and you will overcome diseases of the nerves.

There is no other way. Stimulants arouse false hope. Narcotics deaden the nerves, and temporary relief is followed by a condition which is worse than the first.

Get the blood right and the nervous system will adjust itself. Headaches will disappear; irritability will go, digestion will improve, and weakness and despondency will give place to new hope and courage, new vigor and energy.

Mrs. Geo. Fuller, Lakeland, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of nervous headache, from which I was a great sufferer, and I am no longer troubled with twitchings of the nerves in the arms and legs."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food will enable you to avoid such extreme nervous trouble as prostration and paralysis. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

HOW THIN FOLKS CAN GET FLESHY

New Accidental Discovery Gives Startling Results — Puts Flesh on Thin People and Rounds Out Imperfect Figures.

Simple Prescription Given.

For women—and men too, for that matter—who can never appear stylish with anything they wear, because of abnormal thinness and angularity, this remarkable prescription is destined to solve the problem. As a beauty maker for the figure it is simply wonderful while it adds brightness to the eyes, and colour to the cheeks and lips. It requires no particular dieting, but acts as an aid to nature by its peculiar action on the nerves and blood supply. The blood and nerves distribute over the body, all the nourishment or flesh building elements obtained from the food. The trouble with thin people has always been that they do not absorb or retain enough of the fleshy matter to make them gain in weight even to a normal extent; but this new discovery of blending certain harmless drugs is a revelation to science, and hundreds have gained from ten to forty pounds in a few weeks. There is no danger of becoming too fat. When you get the right weight then stop using.

The general health and strength is greatly improved in anyone from the age of sixteen to sixty. Women soon get plump, with well rounded arms and full bust, and men become straight, strong-looking and healthy.

In a half pint bottle get three ounces of essence of pepsin and three ounces of syrup of rhubarb. Then add one ounce compound essence cardiol; shake and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom.) Take a teaspoonful before and after meals, and weigh before beginning.

WIFE SLAYER CAPTURED

Special to The Examiner.

PITTSBURG, OCT. 20.—Charles Hickman, the wife murderer, who escaped from the Beaver County Jail Sunday morning by sawing his way through three steel doors, was placed in the hands of the police this afternoon by Daniel Williams, a former business partner of Hickman's. Williams was walking along an embankment on the outskirts of Monongahela City when a human form tumbled from the bushes that lined the cliff and rolled limpl ym front of him. Williams turned the prostrate body face upward and recognized his old partner.

Hickman was unable to talk. Williams picked him up and carried him on his back to the nearest store, where he dumped the fugitive, unconscious, into a wagon and drove to the police station. Hickman had no weapons, and his funds were less than a dollar.

He declared the files with which he cut his way out were tossed into his cell last September by a man he did not know. On September 12, Hickman said, he started to cut the bars. Two weeks ago he was ready, except for the outer jail doors. He fashioned a key with a jackknife from a bit of hard wood. The impression for the key was obtained from one of the turnkey's ring with a piece of chewing gum. This was done as the turnkey stood next the prisoner in the barber shop of the jail. Hickman said he slipped the gum from his mouth and squeezed it against the key. He had been chewing gum for two weeks, and was never without it, watching for this opportunity.

Hickman to-night was taken back to the Beaver Jail, and expressed a desire to be relieved from pursuit.

WATER DISGUISED IS CURE FOR DIPSOMANIA

PARIS, OCT. 15.—A new and remarkably successful treatment of dipsomania is announced by a medical paper. To patient who has been cured was an apparently hopeless case. His doctor prescribed a drug, to be taken in minute doses to begin with.

It is a violent poison, and can be absorbed only gradually. In time the system becomes insured to it. The drug must be mixed with your wine or spirits at the rate of one drop the first day, two the second, and so on, until your system is able to assimilate a whole glass of it. The drug will discolor your wine.

The dipsomaniac dutifully did as he was told, increasing the dose very gradually. He noticed that, as the doctor had said, the color of his wine grew paler as he added more of the drug. He observed also that he became accustomed to drinking less and less wine as he increased the proportion of the drug. At last he drank with pleasure a glass full of the latter with only a dash of wine in it. He is absolutely cured, and feels no craving whatever for wine or spirits. He went to thank his doctor, a dusaid: Now, doctor, tell me what that marvellous drug was which has made another man of me?

"Water," said the doctor.

GIRLS TO-DAY TALLER THAN THEIR MOTHERS

WELLESLEY MASS., OCT. 21.—It is the general opinion at Wellesley College that the girls of to-day are taller than their mothers, and that any one who comes into contact with large numbers of girls will answer that this s true. Miss Hazard, for eleven years president of Wellesly, voiced the general opinion of herself and the faculty recently in an official report. She said: "Any close observer of young people, especially young women, will notice the vast difference between the mental and physical standard of to-day and twenty years ago.

"With our better understanding and our healthier conditions the stature of our young women has increased."

"Statistics recently taken at Wellesley from a class of 292 girls show that 192 are taller than their mothers were, 7 are shorter and 26 are of the same height. The average height increase was two inches. One Professor Seuller on the height increase said our modern emphasis on athletics and outdoor life is the real underlying reason that girls are taller than their mothers.

"The reaching out after high ideals and the broadening of women's sympathy, the enlarging of her whole intellectual life is in addition also partly responsible for this tendency."

Another professor said: "Women are more intelligent in regards to their foods. It is not merely the food eaten by the growing girl but the element which enters into the infant's early food."

The majority of the students interviewed agree that the fresh air habit amongst other things is thus leaving a mark of standing on their sex.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

INSTEAD of talking myself, I'm going to let my readers talk to each other to-day, for a change.

You see, it's this way.

A few weeks ago I received a letter from a young girl who had written asking me to tell her of some way to overcome her extreme shyness and self-consciousness. Not knowing exactly how to answer her, I published the appeal and asked my readers to help me out.

And they have. Most handsomely.

Here are some of their excellent suggestions.

They are especially addressed to the girl of the letter, but I suspect that there are plenty of other girls who can make use of them.

"Sensitiveness is selfishness," writes one young woman. "Two years ago I was absolutely the most sensitive and shy person on the face of the earth, I believe. Then I went to a boarding school and fell under the influence of a preceptress, whose life is lived entirely for others.

She taught me to realize this truth—that sensitiveness is selfishness—and to cure it by concentrating my mind on some other objects besides myself. It was hard work, but I finally succeeded, and to-day people wonder how it was I changed so much in so short a time."

"I was just such a girl as you described," writes another woman, "when I read a short article in the Youth's Companion which made a different person of me. In this article a plain, old country grandmother was bidding her grandson 'good-bye' as he was leaving for a business life in the city. She told him that when he was with folks below himself in the social scale to remember they were 'folks' after all, and should be treated with consideration and kindness. And when with those whose manner or position seemed above him, to reflect that they also were only just 'folks' like himself and family, and that there was no real reason why he should be overawed by them. I have not told this so well as the original article, but I hope you catch the idea. Certainly many times when with ladies well versed in ways of society in which I was ignorant, it has given me confidence and ease to remember that they were just 'folks' after all."

A philosophic young woman solved the problem this way.

"I was a painfully reserved, bashful, self-conscious girl. You may be sure I was quite all the things your correspondent says she is. To be liked and sought was my great desire, but I never knew how to begin the campaign. After varied experiences and many sad blows I found that my ideal was wrong. 'To be liked' was not enough. It did not strike the point. The more I pondered over the matter the more I realized that I must reconstruct my ideal, and I finally came to the conclusion that to strive to be liked is not enough. It is in striving to be worthy to be liked that the secret of popularity lies. My viewpoint was now changed completely and in the place of self-consciousness and uneasiness, I found self-reliance and assurance coming. It was no lightning change, remember, but it did come at last."

Another woman suggests—

But dear me, if I try to tell you the half of the wisdom that has been flowing into my office I shall be reproved for running over my space.

So please consider it "continued in our next."

HISTORY OF ALL SAINTS' CHURCH FROM ITS INCIPIENCY AS A MISSION

Was First Started in 1875 in a Room on Dalhousie Street—Sunday School Commenced Later.

SOME COMPARISONS

All Saints' began as a mission sometime about 1875, during the rectorship of the Rev. Mr. Beck, Rector of the parish of Peterborough. Services were held in a little brick building on Dalhousie street. This work lapsed till 1882, when some devoted ladies, at Mr. Beck's suggestion, began a Sunday School in the same building. Later a room in the South Central school was used, and later the rough cast house at the corner of Bethune and Dalhousie. Among the records extanct is the record of joy when the offering reached $1.00. How small a beginning compared with the magnificent grand total of yesterday of nearly $3,100.00, which is all the more worthy as following an offering of over $1,200 last Easter Day.

Rev. J. C. Davidson, Rector in 1889, pushed the work most vigorously and soon the lot on which the present hall stands was secured through the generosity of Miss Chamberlen, who is still a devoted member of All Saints. In those days it was known as St. John's South Ward Mission. Under Mr. Davidson there served Rev. W. M. Loucks, (1891). Rev. E. W. Pickford, (1894); Rev. B. C. H. Andrews, (1895); Rev. Carl Smith, (1895); Rev. W. L. Armitage, (1895). On January 3rd, 1892, the first morning service was held, and on Dec. 25th, 1892, the first administration of the Lord's Supper, (Rev. C. B. Kenrick, celebrant); on June 4th, 1893, the Communion vessels, still in use, were dedicated; Sept 27th, 1895, the first harvest services were held; on Oct. 10th, 1897, the chancel part of the present parish hall was opened for use, the then Bishop of Toronto being the preacher. In 1900 the new pipe organ was procured. Too much praise cannot be given to the workers, clerical and lay, who were raised up to carry on all this work.

On the first of January, 1902, All Saints' was erected, as a separate parish, with jurisdiction south of Charlotte street. Mr. Armitage became first Rector and continued his devoted work till 1904. In 1904 Rev. W. S. Major was appointed Rector. All Saints' continued to grow under his rectorship, which ended in 1908. Mr. Major's work is so fresh in the memory of Peterborough that further reference is unnecessary. The Easter Day communicant record is fairly indicative of the growth of All Saints: 1895, 70; 1896, 85; 1898, 97; 1899, 100; 1901, 167; 1902, 188; 1903, 209; 1907, 227; 1908, 189; 1909, 220; 1910, 231. The Easter offerings have likewise grown from a few dollars to over $1,200.00 this year.

The corner stone was laid with Masonic ritual on July 9th, 1909. Since then the building has steadily progressed till its opening yesterday.

The exterior measures at present 66 by 105 feet. The tower is still to be raised about 25 feet, while the chancel annex, 72 x 34, still remains to be built. With its present comfortable capacity of over 700, there is no pressing need of this at present, although nearly 1,000 people crowded into the edifice last evening, and many were turned away. The building follows a modified form of early English gothic architecture, and is built of brown granite, trimmed with the beautiful gray granite from Stanstead, Quebec. Too much praise cannot be given the masons, Messrs. Sherwood and King, for their work. The exterior, rich, massive, and impressive with its magnificent front doorway, is quite equalled by the purity and simplicity of the interior. The ceiling is beautifully panelled, and the walls are white. The plasterer was Mr. Henry. The church is true to Anglican architecture, but has aimed at utility without losing beauty. For example, it is much wider in proportion without pillars than most Anglican churches, though the chancel addition will make the proportions perfect. There is a slope in the floor and the choir is well elevated about the level of the floor. The windows are from the Crown Art Co. of Toronto, and the seats by the Valley City Seating Co., and add to the general beauty. Vestry accommodation is provided by a rich red curtain which runs round the sanctuary.

In addition to liberal subscriptions in money, and devoted labour by men, women and children, special gifts were made: Lights, (Alexander and Miller) the Girls' Guild; window the Young People's Society; carpet and curtains, the W. A.; memorial window, Mrs. Fitzgerald; Holy Table Mr. James Edgar; silver flagon, (donor's name not given), pulpit desk a number of young people; pulpit light, Mr. Alexander; brass rod and rings for Sanctuary, Mrs. Scott; hymn books, Mr. N. A. Howard Moore; offertory silver plates by four donors: Mr. Whitcroft, Mrs. J. Moore, Mrs. Hillier, Mrs. Corney, and Mrs. Fitzgerald; black silk stole, (Chancel Guild); bulletin board, Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Other gifts are promised and will be duly recorded, and any omissions will be duly rectified in a Parish history, being compiled and shortly to be published by the Rector. Perhaps, however, the greatest contributor has been the Women's Guild, under the successive presidencies of Mrs. D. S. Lundy and Mrs. M. G. Babcock.

The present wardens of All Saints' are Mr. James Edgar and Mr. W. G. Howden. No one has given more time and ability to the building operations than they, and to them much of the credit of the successful issue is due.

The first service in the new building was at 8 o'clock yesterday morning. It was begun with the Te Deum and was choral. Communion was administered by the Rector. There were 126 communicants at this service.

Ald. Duffus Thinks That Building By-law Should Have Been Left Alone

Ald. Duffus brought up a matter at the meeting of the Board of Works on Saturday evening that had been dealt with at the last meeting of the City Council. He enquired regarding the building of J. T. Braund's new store on Charlotte street over the creek. Privileges had been granted in violation of the terms of the building by-law. Mr Montgomery who is building in the next block, was doing considerable kicking about having to conform strictly to the by-law. Mr. Braund had been given privileges not allowed to others. Ald. Hicks believed he had. A by-law to that effect had been passed at the last council meeting. Mayor Morrow said that he had never known a by-law in twenty-five years to have been broken as this one. Ald. Graham and Ald. Duncan stated that they could name a dozen other instances where the by-law had been broken. His Worship opposed the granting of the request of Br and brothers.

SMALL BLAZE

The Fire Brigade made a fast run this afternoon, at 1.25, when a telephone call was sent in from the corner of Aylmer and Hunter streets. The blaze was caused by sparks from the chimney, which was on fire. They alighted on the dry shingles and set fire to them. The fire spread to the next house, but the brigade was on hand so promptly that not more than $15 or $20 damage was done. The building is owned by Mr. LaPlante. The roofs of Nos. 229 and 230 Hunter street, were on fire.

A WOMAN MADE HAPPY

Chase's Nerve Food my system is wonderfully built up. There is no further trouble from dizzy spells and stomach weakness, and with health and strength restored, life has a new pleasure for me."

OBITUARY

ARTHUR JOHN GAELE McAULAY

The death occurred on Saturday night of Arthur John Gaele McAulay at the Nicholls' Hospital. He was brought to the city about three weeks ago by his parents, from Denver, Col. It appears that about six weeks ago, while in Denver, he was playing with a cream separator and got his finger taken off. Blood poisoning set in and he was brought here by his parents, who thought that the change of air might help him to get well.

His remains were taken to Belleville's undertaking rooms, and prepared for burial, after which he was taken to the residence of Mr. Price, 37 Crescent [illegible] from which place the funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2.30 to the Little Lake cemetery.

"That Man Bennett" At Friday's Band Concert

The visit of Mr Harry M. Bennett, the well known Toronto humorist to Peterborough in connection with the concert of the 57th regimental band in the Armouries on Friday night, is arousing much interest. Mr. Bennett's specialty is to sing, talk, mimic, caricature and he is an all round entertainer in a way that is not offensive. Refinement has always been his motto from the start and on that point he has ever been very particular. He will have a large part in Friday night's programme and will likely include his famous Harry Lauder imitation among his offerings. The Toronto has the following to say of Mr. Bennett

The entertainment at the Grand Opera House last night attracted an audience that packed the theatre to the top gallery. It was an enthusiastic audience too, that gave convincing proofs of being delighted with everything that was offered, although it must be admitted that the comic songs of Harry Bennett gained more applause than anything on the programme. Mr Bennett Harry then gave the comic song, "I Want to be a Soldier," in costume, and had to respond to two encores. Mr. Bennett appeared on two other occasions during the evening, and altogether was encored seven times.

Wanted; New Steel Bridge To Span Gannon's Narrows

On Friday last a deputation, consisting of Mr. Frank Mohet, Warden of the County, and Councillors, Mr. Robert Shaw, Harvey, and Mr. C. J. Darling, Dummer, members of the County Roads and Bridges Committee, waited upon Hon J. R. Stratton, M.P., and presented their views in regard to the erection of a new steel bridge over Gannon's Narrows, to replace the present floating bridge.

The Warden pointed out that the present bridge was unsatisfactory in more ways than one. It was a continual source of annual expense to the County and the Township of Harvey; and as the Trent Canal approached completion the need became greater of a proper swing in a permanent bridge. A swing of more modern type should, in the interests of all concerned, be substituted for the present inconvenient arrangement. At any rate, in the course of two years' time at least, the present bridge would have to be renewed. Under these circumstances it was pertinent to inquire what should be done.

Mr. Stratton said he would present the views of the deputation as to the matter of a new bridge to the proper authorities at Ottawa. He further pointed out that before any action could be taken by the Minister of Railways and Canals, he would have to have the report of a competent engineer up on the situation. The deputation did not have an idea of what a bridge like that they suggested would cost; hence the necessity of an official report. In order to secure such a report as would lead to some definite action in the matter, it would be laid before the Minister, with a request to have some person sent to make an estimate of the cost of a new bridge.

LAW OF EXPANSION HAS CERTAINLY BEEN CARRIED OUT BY ALL SAINTS

Able Sermon by Rt. Rev. J. L. Sweeny, M.A., D.D., Bishop of Toronto, at Opening of New All Saints Church Yesterday.

JOYFUL SERVICES

An auspicious consummation to the indefatigable efforts of a united congregation with energetic and hard working rectors in charge, was evidenced yesterday in the formal opening of new All Saints' church. The history of this congregation up to the present time has been one of progress and there is no reason to doubt the continued growth and prosperity. This new house of God is a credit to the people that have built it and worship in it. In another column will be read the history of this church from the time it was first inaugurated as a mission by the congregation of St. John's. The advancement that has been made is phenomenal, the number that once found adequate room in a small mission house, being increased to such an extent that the beautiful new edifice at yesterday morning's service was filled with between six and seven hundred persons. The services yesterday were joyful, and were marked by eloquent and appropriate sermons by Rt. Rev. J. L. Sweeny, M.A., D.D., Bishop of Toronto. His Lordship expressed the pleasure and privilege he felt at being present on such a beautiful, bright October morning, on the occasion of the opening of the new and handsome edifice. He hoped the time was not far distant when the chancel would be completed and he would have the privilege of attending the opening.

The Sermon.

Coming to his text, His Lordship chose it from a portion of the 25th verse of the 10th chapter of St. Paul's epistle to the Hebrews: "Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is." There were two thoughts, he said, that occurred to them. The first one was the meeting together and the opening of the new church, and the second one was the inspiration and the work that lay in a larger area of the community. It meant the opening of a new chapter and the closing of an old one in their history, the closing of the history of the foundation, of the work, when a south ward mission was started in 1875, the closing of that history in 1882 when lay readers supplied the services. His Lordship referred in eulogistic terms to the fatherly and fostering care that Rev. Canon Davidson had given All Saints' congregation in its early days, to the work of the first rector, Rev. W. L. Armitage, of Picton, his successor, Rev. W. L. Major of Montreal, and to the present rector, Rev. H. R. Trumpour. He was sure a great deal of praise was due them and it must be a source of gratification to them to see the crowning of their efforts in this beautiful new church. This church had gone ahead according to the law of expansion. A young man starting out in a commercial enterprise, reached a high standing by diligent effort and close application to business. The same law applied to the church. The church depended on the vitality, the faith and work of its people. "The working of this law of expansion," His Lordship added, "had certainly been for his church and to-day they were reaping the fruits."

The other thought was the inspiration and influence, this church should mean in the community. Speaking of the name "All Saints" as applied to this House of God, His Lordship stated that these sacred names were clustered around the name of Jesus Christ. The church had chosen names of apostles, to perpetuate their memory and their influence. "You," he said, "have chosen "All Saints" to commemorate the blessed dead, who, having finished their work, rest from their labours.

In this beautiful epistle from which our text is taken, there is a beautiful discourse on faith. Without faith we cannot please God. St. Paul tells us of the additional characteristics of patience, patience in tribulation, patience in those things that irritate us, in shouldering our cross day by day. A further mark of saintlihood is prayer, walking with God and communion with Him. There is too, the mark of holiness, the word saint coming from the latin sanctus, meaning holy. All these characteristics stand before you to-day, in your new responsibilities, and they come out to you in a great and noble challenge and appeal to follow the saints and be inspired with the same faith and holiness, to renounce the devil and consecrate yourselves to God in whom you live and have your being."

In conclusion His Lordship urged his hearers to make this, their lofty ambition, to mark this occasion by treasuring this great ambition, and thus to well emulate those blessed saints who, having finished their work with joy, now rest from their labours.

During the service, gifts to the church, in the way of a memorial window, a communion table, offertory plates and hymnal boards, were dedicated by His Lordship.

The music at All Saints' church at all services was of a special character. The regular choir was augmented by seventeen voices from St. John's choir. Mr. George Chandler acted as leader, and the offertory anthem at both morning and evening services was sung to orchestra accompaniment. The morning anthem was "Send Out Thy Light," and in the evening it was the "Gloria" from Mozart's 12th mass.

"A Growing Ideal," Subject At Inspiring Meeting Of Goodfellowship Guild

At the Princess Theatre men's meeting yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of the League of Goodfellowship, the Rev. C. Carpenter gave an address on "A Growing Ideal." He commenced by saying that a review of the centuries was necessary to comprehend the vantage point at which we have arrived—centuries of struggling. He showed that the Roman Empire was entirely imperialistic; that Caesar was an autocrat of the first order, an absolute imperial master. That the doctrine of the empire was the survival of the fittest, and that the prominent ideal was the idea of power or might, not right. "Caesar is Caesar; all others are slaves." All the functions of civil government, finance, law and morals were in his hands.

Then there was the little kingdom of the Jews. Their form of government was not imperialistic, but theocratical, or governed by God, as opposed to the Roman view that the greatest should rule, and the few should govern the many. The Jews fell away from their ideal, but law is external and therefore the ideal still kept working in this little Israel and four centuries later Caesar humbled himself before the Son of Man, and realized that he was nothing more than an ordinary man in the sight of God. The ideal set by Christ was that the rights of man should be observed and that all men are brothers in God's sight. The first victory over the imperialism of Caesar was the teaching that man was a supernatural being.

After this came the imperialism of the Church. The great mistake made was crediting one man with supreme power. Calling him the Vicar of Christ, and teaching that God would not deal with the individual man.

The second victory for the growing ideal was when men rose and said: "All men are brothers." Martin Luther's teaching was "God made all things, therefore God is in all things, therefore God is in me." And how he pointed out the power of choice, and the right of private judgment.

This brought down the autocracy, or imperial policy of the church, and allowed men to come into close contact with God ,and to deal with him at first hand. Then the invention of printing, the progress of learning and science made men begin to realize that knowledge was unfathomable. Galileo demonstrated that the world was not a flat plain, but a globe, and only part of a marvellous planetary system, and man saw that he had only got a little way on the path of knowledge. The reverend gentleman wound up his subject b ydeclaring that slavery degrades ,oppression crushes, but liberty makes man master of his own convictions, and just to others. God's laws have been given to us to uplift and ennoble. Christ-made men realize that they should no longer be self-converted, but by godly lives brother's keeper, and uplift others by uplifting themselves. The inherent power of manhood will conquer the world. To take man from slavery and degradation and to make him free for the uplifting of the world at large. This is the growing ideal.

Instrumental music and a sacred song was given by several friends during the afternoon.

A cordial invitation was given to all to visit the club room at 161 Antrim street any evening from 7 to 10.

ARE INDIGNANT

MONTREAL, QUE., OCT. 24.—Indignation is running high here among the Catholics, both French and English speaking, and threats of violence are being made against one Norman Murray, a local agitator, who openly made charges of mercenary motives against the priests in a speech yesterday, and spoke slightingly, almost blasphemously, about certain reverenced rites of the sacred church.

CLEVER PHOTOGRAPHY

549 Elm street, city.

Mr .Editor.—I would like to draw your attention to what I call a clever piece of photography, to be seen in the show case of "The Richmond Studio" on Hunter street. The subject is called, "A Miser's Hallowe'en" The picture is certainly a curious one and will keep one guessing as to how the effect is obtained. For originality and enterprise, I do not think it can be equalled in this city, and is well worth inspecting.

Yours truly,

Board Of Works Held Busy Session---Matters Discussed

The City Board of Works met Saturday evening. There were present Mayor Morrow, Chairman Ald. Hicks and Ald. Metheral, Duncan, Graham and Duffus.

Ald. Metheral reported that the sidewalk on Wolfe street lies so much higher than Mr. Carlisle's property that surface water backs up into his cellar. Street Commissioner Evans will investigate and report.

Ald. Graham's suggestions that an approach be built to Knox church, on Rubidge street, will be carried out.

The insurance on the machinery and equipment in the city yard having run out, Chairman Ald. Hicks was authorized to renew same in a tariff company, deducting whatever valuation was placed on the road roller recently disposed of.

Commissioner Evans was instructed to act on the complaint of E. J. Jackson that a ditch opposite his store is quite impassable after a heavy rain.

An approach to W. W. Cole's property on Downie street, was allowed.

W. F. Morrison is anxious to build a cement wall between his property and the Downie street creek, on Victoria avenue, providing the city furnishes the material. He also wanted sewer connection. The committee not being quite clear as to which of these requisitions, Mr. Morrison was pressing for immediate attention, no action was taken on either.

Mr. McKewen is asking for sewer connection this fall with the house he is erecting on Benson and Aberdeen avenues, also for a sidewalk. This matter must take the usual course.

The draining of the miniature lake that forms each spring on Perry street was reported on by the engineer. This will be attended to at a cost of $35.

Two catch basins are to be constructed.

W. J. Johnston's application for a concrete crossing on Aylmer, from Edinburgh to Dublin, was left over for action next spring.

The Engineer reported that it will cost $84 to fix the sidewalks and do the grading needed on Hunter street, at the Quaker Oats property, west of the bridge. Half the cost of this work should be borne by the Quaker Oats people, who will also furnish the cinders for a pathway across the tracks.

The Board agreed that the most equitable way would be for the company to pay the full cost of that portion of this work rendered necessary through their building operations, they to either do the work themselves or the city undertake it, and charge the expense of same to the company.

ONE STILL MISSING

Capt. Hugo Von Obercron Tells How He and One of His Crew Spent Thirty Hours Trying to Get Out of Dense Forests of Northern Quebec—Drusseldorf Effects a Successful Landing at Kiskisink.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Only one of the St. Louis balloons is now missing, the America II.; and according to the crew of the Germania, it was probably seen by a gang of railway navvies along the G.T.P. construction in northern Quebec on Wednesday, heading for Ungava.

Lieut. Andrew Drew of the Missouri signal corps, and hydrographic expert of the Aero Club of St. Louis, gives the distances traveled by the aeronauts unofficially as follows:

Dusseldorf II. (Germany), landed at Kiskisink, Que., distance about 1,100 miles.

Germania (Germany), landed at Cocoo Cache, Que., about 1,040 miles.

Helvetia (Switzerland), landed at Ville Marie, Que., about 850 miles.

Isle de France (France), landed at Pogamasing, Ont., about 725 miles.

St. Louis IV. (American), landed at Hillman, Mich., about 550 miles.

Eighteen Thousand Feet Up.

Quebec, Oct. 24.—The German and Swiss balloons Germania and Helvetia came down some miles away from a G.T.P. construction camp in Northern Quebec, and their crews were lost for thirty hours, suffering greatly from cold and hunger. Capt. Hugo Von Obercron tells of the story of himself and August Blanckertz reaching Cocoo Cache on the Transcontinental, the cold driving them almost insane before reaching the camp fire.

The experience of hour after hour, almost running into days, that followed their landing, as related by Mr. Blanckertz, can only be equalled by tales of the early voyageurs in the trackless wilds of the Northland, and with the advantage very much in favor of the voyageurs, in that they had some knowledge of bush work. Half an hour's groping through the woods brought them to the edge of a small lake, from which rose myriads of wild ducks and geese, probably startled from their hounts for the first time by man.

When almost at their last gasp they saw the railway track and construction gang, which they reached at six o'clock Thursday afternoon, 32 hours after leaving the balloon. The construction gang were Bulgarian and Italian navvies, but Mr. Blanckertz says they were like princes to him, and their bunkhouse, where he slept that night, was cozier than any palatial hotel he had ever been in.

The navvies had seen the Germania descend, and were expecting the aeronauts. They also claim to have seen a yellow balloon, Mr. Blanckertz thinks, probably the America II., one of the still missing balloons, preceding the Germania by half an hour, and heading in the same direction. She was very high up, and maintained the same altitude until she passed out of sight toward the Ungava wilderness.

Missing Balloon Lands.

Kiskisink, Que., Oct. 24.—The balloon Dusseldorf II., which landed on Wednesday 17 miles north of Lake Kiskisink, which is 130 miles northeast of Quebec, had a perilous journey of 1,240 miles, attaining a speed at one time of seventy-five miles an hour.

Gericke and Perkins, the aeronauts, state they could have floated 36 hours longer, having fifteen bags of ballast still in store, but feared going further into the wilderness. Their route was from St. Louis to Milwaukee, then almost northeast. After crossing Lake Michigan, with a good wind, they were becalmed for five hours. Then they struck a tempestuous storm belt, and flew across the continent at great speed, making the landing very dangerous.

The shore of Lake Kiskisink was decided upon as a favorable point to land, but the valve refused to work when the Dusseldorf was 10,000 feet high, and the descent was made in nine minutes.

The balloon was rolled up, and the party started to walk toward the railway at 3 p.m., but by six o'clock only half a mile was made through the dense underbrush, and camp was struck for the night. In the morning it was decided to return to the balloon for extra provisions. On Thursday afternoon a second attempt was made to get out of the wilderness, and on Saturday noon the balloonists were discovered, when only two miles from the starting point, by Theo Boivin, guardian of the Penn Fish and Game Club, who was making his fortnightly trip up the Kiskisink River.

The balloonists' whole trip was thrilling and interesting, many times hovering over the tree tops, and then at a height of 17,000 feet in quest of a favorable air current.

SEMINARY STARTED

Corner-stone of Great O'Keefe Benefaction Laid In Toronto.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—In the presence of a gathering well representative of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity of the Archdiocese of Toronto, the elaborate ceremonial of laying the corner-stone of St. Augustine's Seminary, Scarboro Heights, was carried out by His Grace, Archbishop McEvay yesterday afternoon. The occasion was one of double thankfulness, in that it marked not only the founding of an institution which will undoubtedly be potent in augmenting the ranks of the priesthood, but that it signalled the return of the archbishop to official activity after a long illness, which has caused no slight anxiety.

There were two outstanding figures at the ceremonies in addition to his grace. Bishop Fallon of London was there, a stately and impressive personage in his robes, but easy of poise and of genial aspect with all. It was he who preached the dedicatory sermon, but he made no reference to bilingual schools. Then there was

CHEVALIER EUGÈNE O'KEEFE.

Chevalier O'Keefe, private chamberlain to His Holiness Pope Pius the Tenth. It was his magnificent liberality which made possible the project of the $300,000 seminary, a circumstance to which Archbishop McEvay, in his official message, read by Rev Father Kill, chancellor to the Archdiocese of Toronto, and Bishop Fallon made grateful reference.

Bishop Fallon, as before said, did not allude to a matter of recent strong contention, but, in the course of a vigorous assertion of the right of the Roman Catholic Church to be considered the only church which had maintained the Christian faith in all its integrity, he for a few moments invaded other controversial ground, that of higher criticism, with the significant declaration that the Roman Catholic Church never allowed students or professors to tear any pages out of the Bible, suppress any chapters of the Bible or to make ashes of any part from Genesis to the Apocalypse. His views on the urgent necessity of a strong moral law in the present age was likewise clear-cut and forceful.

An Enthusiastic Welcome at Newmarket—United States Contention if Successful Would Have Meant Humiliation and Tyranny.

FREEDOM ENDANGERED

Toronto, Oct. 24.—"No separation" was the dominant note in the speech of the Minister of Justice to his constituents in North York at Newmarket on Saturday afternoon. It was Mr. Aylesworth's first public appearance since his return from The Hague, and naturally he turned to his experience there for a text. When Mr. Aylesworth, who was accompanied by Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, reached Newmarket he was tendered a complimentary luncheon. The Town Hall would not accommodate all the people who had assembled for the public meeting afterwards. An engrossed address signed by several hundred of his constituents was presented.

In replying to the welcome accorded him, Mr. Aylesworth's voice shook with emotion. He thanked them for their reception. After all that he had seen abroad he was glad to get back to the Province of Ontario with its kind hearts and kind faces.

Proceeding to his subject, Mr. Aylesworth reviewed the history of the fisheries' dispute. "Senator Turner, counsel for the United States at The Hague," said Mr. Aylesworth, "went the length of the contention that not only had the United States a right to be consulted and have a voice in the laws which governed the exercise of fishing operations in this Canadian territory, but they had a right to a part in the enforcement of those laws, if they did not agree to something which the Canadian Parliament might want to do, they had a perfect right, according to Senator Turner's argument, to enforce their own view by sending an armed force into these waters by sending men-of-war. Because they had the right to a voice in the making of the laws, they had the better right to make the law, as, according to his contention the effect of this treaty had been to make Canada or Great Britain subservient to the dominant power of the United States, of which the right to fish had been by treaty given.

Continuing Mr. Aylesworth declared, "any such contention, if it had prevailed would have been intolerant in its humiliation, and would have left us in this respect governed from Washington. This was no fanciful possibility that was before us. This was a real and actual thing, in peril of which this country stood." He did not know how far the United States would have gone, but such was the principal of their whole position."

In conclusion, Mr. Aylesworth said that he had heard murmurs of dissatisfaction among Canadians that Great Britain was not at one with her colonies and was lukewarm toward them. He stepped forward to the edge of the platform, his eyes opened, the man seemed to grow larger, and exclaimed:

"And all the might and prestige and power of Great Britain stood by us, and the British Government has defended us with the strength of their right arm. We have gone through this strenuous struggle as a united community, refusing to be separated. Nevertheless, more than one effort on the part of the representatives of the United States was made before the tribunal to persuade the tribunal that these were little colonial difficulties in regard to which the Government of Great Britain did not sympathise, in regard to which the Home Government was not with its colonies.

"I am glad to be able to tell you that from the first to the last of this dispute no spirit of wavering has even been exhibited, but that the Government of Great Britain, and Great Britain herself, in every way in which it could be done, has backed us on this side of the Atlantic; has stood by us and supported us in precisely the same way in which we in Canada tried, to the limit of our ability, to stand by our own colony of Newfoundland.

"Just as in every storm and every stress, these men stood firm by British institutions and British loyalty, so we, their sons, stand to-day. And so let me persuade myself that long after we, here, are gathered unto our final rest, that those who come after us will stand true to Great Britain and British institutions, until time itself shall make an end."

To Stop Man-Smuggling.

Buffalo, Oct. 24.—Believing that an extensive traffic is being done in smuggling undesirable aliens over the river from Buffalo and Tonawanda, the Canadian immigration department has despatched special officers to watch the shore of the Niagara River between Bridgburg and Chippawa.

Chippawa will be the principal scene of the special officers' activities for it is believed that the chief landing place of the smugglers is a short distance above that village. The plans of the department in laying its trap were kept a close secret, but the fact that several officers had been sent to watch the border became known in the village along the river and caused a good deal of comment.

It is reported that the reasons which caused the department to watch the whole river front was the discovery of foreigners at inland points who had not passed at any of the regular ports of entry. This led to the conclusion that they must have been smuggled across the river.

Enquiry along the frontier produced stories of strange lights seen at lonely points at late hours, and of motor boats which made their way cautiously through the waters under cover of darkness. There were also statements of the foreigners caught which pointed to river smuggling, but none of the men who fell into the hands of the immigration officials would tell who had brought them across or where.

Fell Off Train.

Welland, Oct. 24.—Miss Jennie Harren, a young woman residing at Stevensville, was picked up unconscious near the M.C.R. tracks just east of here yesterday morning. It is supposed that in returning from Buffalo she missed getting off at Stevensville, and in attempting to get off the train Saturday night, fell, being stunned, lying where she fell all night. It is expected she will recover.

PRINCE OF TECK DIES.

Severe Cold After an Operation Proves Fatal.

London, Oct. 24.—Prince Francis of Teck died Saturday. The death will cause a temporary resumption of full mourning at court. Queen Mary has been a devoted sister and King George has always been on intimate terms with the three Teck princes. Like his two brothers, Prince Francis was trained at Sandhurst for a military career, and was converted into a seasoned soldier by service in India, Egypt and South Africa. He was the best sportsman in the Teck family and cared less for the pleasures of society than either of his brothers. Since his retirement from the army he had spent much time in Ireland and Scotland, where he could get fine shooting.

Queen Mary, after the prince's throat had been operated on for an obstruction, insisted on having him visit her at Balmoral, where he could regain his strength in the bracing air. When he caught a severe cold in the Highlands the King's own physician took charge of the case, and he recommended the removal to a nursing home, where he could have scientific treatment.

The Queen is overwhelmed with grief over the loss of her favorite brother. There is a full measure of public sympathy, for the Teck princes have been respected as gallant soldiers who have not shirked their duty to the state. The prince was born at Kensington Palace in 1870. After serving in the army in Egypt and South Africa, he retired in 1902 with the title of major.

Crimean Veteran Dies.

Brockville, Oct. 24.—One of the few surviving Crimean veterans passed away at his home in this town, Edward Buckingham, aged 72, a conspicuous figure in Brockville for forty years.

When the Crimean war broke out, Buckingham, though only 16 years old, was accepted for service, being then almost six feet tall. He participated in many of the leading battles of the campaign, and, after peace was declared, came to Canada with the 97th Regiment, serving at Montreal and Quebec. He was a Fenian raid veteran also.

Buckingham contracted an illness while attending the recent Toronto Exhibition, from the effects of which he never recovered. His wife is dead, and there is no family.

Charged With Perjury.

Quebec, Oct. 24.—Detective Walsh received a telegram from Inspector Begin of the N.W.M.P. at Prince Albert, Sask., to be on the look-out for a young girl named Helen Seimer, who is charged with perjury and who was supposed to leave this port for England. Detective Walsh went down to the C.P.R. wharf Friday afternoon shortly before the Empress of Britain left port, and spotted the young girl as she was landing from the incoming western train. The accused will be kept in the Good Shepperd's Convent, until the arrival of an officer from Prince Albert. The prisoner is only 18 years of age.

Fisherman Drowns.

London, Oct. 24.—Jos Farley, a Port Stanley fisherman, was drowned eight miles out on the lake yesterday morning. He was the only one on the deck of the tug at the time, the others being at breakfast. They heard a cry, and when they reached the open he was gone. His home was in Trenton, N.J.

Cobourg Pastor Goes to Belleville.

Belleville, Oct. 24.—Rev. Dr. Shotey of Cobourg has been extended a call to become pastor next year of the Tabernacle Methodist Church in this city.

Athletics Are Baseball Champions Of The World
Won On Sunday 7 to 2

CHICAGO, OCT. 23.—The baseball championship of the world belongs to the Philadelphia club of the American League. They clinched the big pennant fast to-day by beating the Chicago Cubs 7 to 2. Five games were played in the series, and the eastern youngsters took four of them by outbatting, outfielding and outrushing the veteran Chicagoans.

The players' share of the money taken in amounts to $79,071.93. Of this 60 per cent., or $47,443.15, goes to the winners and $31,628 77 to the losers. As there are 23 players on each team eligible to participate each of the Philadelphians is entitled in round numbers to $2,062, and each Chicagoan to $1,375.

The total receipts for the series were $173,940. The two clubs receive $39,755 each, while $17,399 goes to the National Commission. The total paid attendance was 125,219 persons.

The performance of Coombs in pitching and winning three of a five-game series, is probably unique. He had but one day's rest between the second and third games, but three days intervened between the third contest and that of to-day. He had better control to-day than in the previous contests and foiled the opposing batters when hits meant runs. Brown pitched excellent ball, except in the disastrous eighth, and the holocaust of that inning was by no means entirely his fault.

The day was bright and the weather of the Indian summer variety. Ground rules were necessary. Philadelphia took the lead at the outset, when Hartzel, who played left field, while Lord was sent to centge in place of Strunk, singled. He stole second while Lord was striking out, and brought in the third run when Collins hit to centre for one base. Brown struck out Lord and Davis in this inning.

Chicago came right back in the second, when Chance doubled to left, took third on a sacrifice and scored when Steinfeldt delivered a belated hit.

In the third and fourth Philadelphia was not threatening, but Coombs did some stellar pitching to save himself from being scored against in Chicago's half of the fourth. Two hits and a pass had filled the bases, with one out, but Coombs fanned the always-to-be-feared Tinker and Archer.

The easterners assumed the lead in the fifth and were never headed thereafter Steinfeldt's fumble gave Murphy a life at first, Barry sacrificed and Lapp, who donned the catcher's mitt in place of Thomas, sent him home with a single. The Chicago team went to pieces in the eighth. Brown held Coombs too lightly and the latter singled, but later was forced by Hartzel. Lord doubled and Hartzel scored, following which Collins rapped out another two-bagger and Lord crossed the plate. Collins, taking advantage of the confusion in the Chicago camp, stole third, but was out at the plate when Baker hit weakly to Zimmerman. Davis was allowed to walk, placing runners on first and second.

Then Chicago blew up. Murphy singled to centre and Baker scored from second. Davis was at Baker's heels and Hofman, who retrieved the hit, threw a block away from Archer and Davis scored. Murphy had reached second and stopped, but Umpire O'Day invited him to take another base under the ground rules. Hofman's wild heave having bumped the grandstand. Just to top off the farce, Brown delivered a wild pitch and Murphy came home. A moment later Brown gave Barry a base on balls, but Lapp ended the hilarity with an even grounder.

In their half of this inning the Chicagos took a desperate brace and added a run to their score, but that was all. Sheckard doubled to left and went to third on Schulte's out. Hofman missed three good ones, but Capt. Chance produced the needed hit and Sheckard scored. Zimmerman died on a long fly to left.

Coombs tightened up in the ninth. Steinfeldt and Tinker hoisted to Lord. Archer made his first hit, but was forced at second for the last of the series, when Kling who batted for Brown, sent an easy grounder to Barry.

Chicago's failure in the series can be laid to one cause—the weakness of the pitchers. Not one of the pitchers was able to keep the hits down. Overall, Brown, Pfeister, Reulbach, and McIntyre all looked alike to the Philadelphia hitters. The attendance to-day was 27,374. Receipts, $37,-110.50. Players' share, $20,042.91. Cubs' share, $13,361.94 National Commission's, $3,711 65.

PRIZES FOR EXAMINER RACE ARE NOW ON EXHIBITION

The prizes for the Examiner Thanksgiving Day road races are on exhibition in the south window of the Peterborough book store and have attracted considerable attention from those who have seen them. The prizes are the most valuable that the Examiner has yet offered, the management having taken into consideration the fact that this year's races promise to be the best in the history of the events.

In the senior event, the winner receives for one year the Examiner trophy, emblematic of the road racing championship of the Midland counties and in addition is awarded a very handsome gold watch. The second prize is a beautiful sapphire and diamond scarf pin, the third a gold signet ring and the fourth a gold locket. The junior winner gets a gold watch, the second youngster across the line a pearl stick pin, the third a pair of amethyst cuff links and an amethyst tie pin and the fourth a gold signet ring.

The senior race is under the sanction of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union. The entrants who are not already registered with that body should secure application blanks from the office at once. Registration will cost each runner twenty-five cents. Those who have not entered but intend to do so, should send their names in at once in order that they may secure C.A.A.U. cards.

Prominent Athletes of Indian Blood

The following article, taken from the New York World, will prove very interesting. It was accompanied by life size cuts of redmen prominent in sports and athletics, among them being one of Fred Simpson, of Hiawatha:

The fight between red man and white man is still on, but the conflict is now conducted on the field of sport, where the rivalry, if less deadly, is no less keen than it was in days of yore. On this new field of battle the qualities that made the savage Indian so dreaded a foe make his twentieth century grandson a rival who must be respected. Endurance, pugnacity, subtle craft, keenness of eye, swiftness of limb, sureness of touch, are inherited qualities no less useful in modern sport than in frontier warfare.

The long trail and the woody ambuscade, where formerly the Indian sought to entrap and kill his enemy, are now represented by the chalk-marked football field, the cinder-strewn running path, the greensward baseball field and latest of all, the oil-soaked road of the automobile course.

From the reservations have come the fleet-footed runners that have often made slower white men run in the dust from their heels. Out of the Indian schools, principally Carlisle, have come the sturdy football teams that by brawn and by cunning have humbled their white brethren before the gaze of multitudes. From off the plains of the West has come still another redman, who, at the wheel of a powerful automobile, has striven with skill and daring against the white man in terrifying, death-defying races. And the crafty Indians have have more than once humbled their white brethren on the baseball field.

The Indian warrior of to-day is the brave of three generations back merely in a different environment. Nothing was more natural than that the red men should turn to the most strenuous forms of athletic exercise as an outlet for the fierce energy and the restless spirit that had been pent up since they were despoiled of their wild patrimony. Into these sports of the white people the Indians have brought many of their racial characteristics, and there are many sports which we owe to the Indians, features of which their players had never thought until the red men introduced them.

What baseball fan is not familiar with the name and fame of Big Chief Meyers, the catcher on the Giants? More than one of his white opponents have fallen a victim to his cunning when by a sudden unexpected throw to the base he has caught a rash runner and put him out. Time after time has a swiftly thrown ball, suddenly deflected by the bat of the batsman, maimed and torn the fingers and hands of Meyers, yet with the stolid indifference of his race he has given no sign of the pain he must have suffered.

Another prominent figure on the baseball field is Chief Bender of the Philadelphia Athletics, the champions of their league and the present contenders for the championship of the world. Year after year has Bender gone along pitching remarkable ball, achieving success quite as much by his shrewdness and strategy a shy brute force and strength. Those who have watched the marvellous Bender have noted above all else his perfect disregard of the taunts and jeers, the shouts and cheers of the throngs about him. With the same stoic indifference for which the Indians have ever been noted he has gone along with a pertinacity similar to that of his ancestors trailing wild game through trackless forest.

It is at the Carlisle Indian School, the most famous institution of its kind in the world, that the Indian of to-day displays most conspicuously the traits of his race.

No game enjoyed by white people appealed to the nature of the Indian lads in the school more than football, and for years their teams have proved worthy opponents for the best of the white elevens. In their football more than in any other game the Indians found opportunities to display these characteristics that Cooperdelighted to portray in the "Leather Stocking Tales." Hurts and bruises that sent his white opponents to the side lines failed completely to dampen the Indian's spirits or to impair his efficiency. For years the Carlisle lads played a greater number of games than any other team in the country. Beginning at the very opening of the season, they have gone along meeting opponent after opponent weeks after other elevens have been willing and ready to stop for the year.

Stoical indifference to pain has, however, not been the most prominent characteristic of the Indian in football. Rather has it been his strategy. The cunning craft that made him so dreaded a foe in the white man when the possession of the plains was at stake have made him just as worthy a foe now that the prize is but the glory of victory.

It is not likely that those who saw the game nor those participated in it will ever forget the Harvard-Carlisle match of 1903. Victory seemed destined first to crown the standards of Harvard and later those of the Indians. Then a turn of luck put the white boys in the lead. The time for play was drawing to a close. That the Indians with all their skill and all their perseverance were doomed to defeat seemed certain. And then came a play that will never be forgotten. The Indians go tthe ball. The two teams lined up. Suddenly the ball was snapped to one of the Indians. The others gathered about him for an instant and then scattered to every part of the field. The Harvard players, confused, stopped still, for the biff was nowhere in sight. Suddenly, off to one side of the field, a dark-skinned little man was seen running at top speed toward the Harvard goal. The Crimson players dashed off in pursuit, but too late to prevent the touchdown. The Indian, Dillon was his name, had concealed the ball beneath his jersey. When brute strength had failed the red men had won by strategy.

The historic fame of the Indians as swift runners has been fully borne out by the performances of the present day. Longboat, Accose, and Red Hawk of this generation and Deerfoot of the last have time after time run on and on until their white opponents dropped panting and breathless by the wayside.

It is true that if the last Vanderbilt Cup race De Hymel, the first Indian ever to enter such a contest, did not win. This, however, was no fault of the man, but rather that of the car. So long as the car he was driving ran true no one in the great race displayed more courage or daring, more persistency or skill than did the little Aztec.

The modern Indian warrior upholds the honour of his tribe as did the warrior of outher days, and while the Chippewa and the Iroquois, the Apache and the Ute no longer seek the scalp of the pale face in a literal sense, they seek it figuratively, and more than once they have hung it in the guise of a well-earned athletic trophy from the ridge pole of their tepee.

WRESTLERS ARRIVE AT NEW YORK

NEW YORK, OCT 22—Antonio Pierri and his two "Turkish Lions", Yussuff Mahomet and Halil Osman, arrived here this week. Pierri is bent on matching his charges aginst Geo. Hackenschmidt, the "Russian Lion," and Frank Gotch, America's champion.

Pierri said he will deposit $1,000 guarantee that Mahmout will defeat Gotch and the same amount that Mahmout will throw Hackenschmidt twice in one hour. He will insist, though, that the bouts be catch-as-catch-can style.

"Hackenschmidt is an actor," he said. "He doesn't know how to wrestle. He is a star at the Graeco-Roma nstyle, but that is merely show stuff. He knows nothing about out-and-out wrestling. His long suit is giving theatrical exhibitions.

"Gotch is a great wrestler. He can defeat Hackenschmidt without half trying, and no one knows that better than does the Russian. For that reason they will never meet in a fair match. I think so much more of the ability of Gotch than I do of Hack, that I will give the Americans no concessions. He must meet my man on even terms. Then, if he wins, I will say he is the world's greatest wrestler."

After Pierri had discussed the relative merits of his champion and the other claimants of the world's title, he told how Hackenschmidt, Zbysco, Lemm, and Gama evaded him in England. He said:

"While passing through London on my way to Turkey from America last May the managers of all four of these wrestlers insisted that they have a chance to meet my man. I refused at the time, but promised to return in September and take on one or all of them. I kept my word, and reached London in September and immediately posted $1,000 to bind the match with any of them. Despite a clamour for the sporting public of London for a match, all four evaded me for four weeks, and then skipped out of town.

"Hackenshmidt is coming to this country next month. He has already signed a contract to make an American tour, and when he arrives here I'll be ready to match Mahmout against him."

The Irisbrook had lost her chief engineer, who died of dysentery during the voyage; the Campania had a second cabin passenger ill; and the Taormina had lost a steerage passenger, who died on Oct. 18 of gastro-enteritis.

The Roma, not having stopped at any infected ports and all being well on board, was released. The Campania was held, to await examination in the case of the sick passenger; the Irisbrook, Taormina and Columbia were held for further investigation.

ECZEMA NOT A BLOOD DISEASE

Eczema is a disease of the skin and not of the blood. For this reason internal medicines have never been a success in curing eczema. Whatever the cause local application is necessary to heal the sores and restore the skin to a healthful, natural condition. For this reason Dr. Chase's Ointment has a world wide reputation as being without a rival as a cure for Eczema.

"THE MIDNIGHT SONS"

Lew Fields' prodigious musical success, "The Midnight Sons," with its cast of 100 people and tremendous scenic equipment, will be the attraction at the Grand Theatre next Thursday, Oct. 27, when this biggest of all spectacles makes its first and what will prove its last appearance in this city. "The Midnight Sons" doubtless is the most widely advertised musical play ever staged. This is largely due to the fact that it remained 36 weeks at the Broadway Theatre, New York, where it attracted the attention of every visitor to the city.

The play so strongly appealed to these visitors that Mr. Fields and the Shuberts are sending "The Midnight Sons" on a tour in spite of the enormous expense attached to the transportation of such heavy and massive scenery. For one scene alone which takes over 15 hours to put in place, nearly 100 carpenters, stage hands, sceneshifters and electricians are required to operate the scenery and properties. This scene shows the interior of a theatre with an audience of nearly 500 people.

PREACHED YESTERDAY

At Vespers at the Church of the Sacred Heart yesterday, Rev. Father Phelan, of Young's Point, preached to a large congregation. He delivered a very able address and his eloquent words were followed with the closest interest.

Meat and Fish Standards.

Ottawa, Oct. 24.—Meat and fish standards have been adopted by order-in-council. They are of highly technical nature, and refer to constituent parts of meat and fish, as well as of meat and fish products. The standards prescribe the chemical composition of lard, bacon, sausage and so forth.

Improved Winter Service

Port Arthur, Oct. 24.—The passenger train service heretofore applying only to summer on the C.N.R., between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, will be continued through the winter, with practically no change, and the service between Port Arthur and Duluth will be improved, by the addition of through sleepers both ways.

Holding Off the C.N.R.

Belleville, Oct. 24.—H. C. Hunt, S. Anderson and C. Wilmot have been cited before the court, to show cause why they should not accept what has been offered them by the C.N.R. which line has been surveyed through their premises, just west of the city limits.

Is This Murder?

Montreal, Oct. 24.—A tragic unexplained mystery was unearthed yesterday at Westmount, when the remains of a woman were found in a vacant lot. The body was badly decomposed, and all identification was rendered impossible. The body was hid in some shrubbery.

Reject Proportionate Representation.

Berne, Switzerland, Oct. 24.—Switzerland has rejected the constitutional amendment providing for a system of proportionate representation in the elections for the national council. The vote as announced is 282,000 to 238,000 against the amendment.

Soap.

Investigators say that soap has more or less value as a disinfectant.

Baptists In Convention at Toronto Vote to Allow the University Authorities to Rule In the Matter of the Teaching and Appear Almost Unanimously Satisfied With Professor Matthews.

Toronto, Oct. 25. Prof. I. G. Matthews yesterday confronted the Ontario and Quebec Baptist Convention and vindicated his three logical teachings at McMaster University, as to which for some two years now, there had been a series of attacks. He prefaced a straight avowal of his beliefs by a long and carefully prepared address, in which he dwelt on the necessity for careful Bible examination that did not, however, carry with it any fact of heresy.

The discussion on the report of McMaster University Senate and Board of Governors, which precipitated the Matthews hearing, occupied the entire afternoon session and was resumed at 7.30 p.m., and at fifteen minutes past midnight the convention by a practically unanimous voted to adopt the following amendment, submitted by Rev. John MacNeil:

"That the senate and the board of governors be entrusted with the maintenance of the theological curriculum as submitted in the report."

When the afternoon session began, Bloor street Baptist Church was crowded, President Holman remarked that "the university is to be congratulated on being so popular." He asked that personalities should be avoided in the discussion and that a spirit of harmony should prevail.

Chancellor McKay then submitted the university report, which has already been made public. He continued:

"I believe it is my duty to make a full, frank statement of all matters dealing with the theological controversy. I agree that the debate should be kept on a high plane. But I am not the one responsible for bringing the matter here, nor is the senate. It will be necessary to refer to some persons by name," said the chancellor, and he mentioned the pamphlet issued by Rev. Elmore Harris. Six years ago the theological curriculum had been revised, giving a place to the study of Old Testament introduction, and this was placed in Prof. Matthews' hands, which he held for three years. Chancellor McKay then came to the written report, the charges first made in 1908 by Dr. Harris, based on rumors, reports, conversations, etc. Then Dr. Harris, Dr. Hughson and Hon. John Dryden were appointed a committee, who found Prof. Matthews "sound on all the fundamentals of Baptist faith and practice," and the matter dropped.

"Dr. Harris' pamphlet, which has been sent into every Baptist house in the convention, so far as I know," declared that the statement in the report was "without foundation," said Dr. McKay, who quoted Dr. Hughson's report and said: "I ask this convention if Dr. Harris is right."

Later, Dr. McKay quoted such a conservative theologian as Dr. Strong of Rochester, as having approved the Matthews' views, though not in every detail. The senate had adopted the committee report which exonerated Prof. Matthews by 13 to 4, and he believed that 30 out of 37 members approved.

"It is not Prof. Matthews alone," the chancellor pointed out, "it is now a question of the theological faculty."

Rev. Elmore Harris stated that throughout the controversy he had endeavored to steer clear of any personalities.

"I want to say, as I ought not to say, that I have put into the treasury over $5,000 of my own money. Does that look as though I had the interest of McMaster University at heart? My controversy is not with Prof. Matthews."

Mr. Harris considered that his pamphlet should have been put before the convention, because, as he stated, his side of the argument had been shut out from the public press. He also remarked that the chancellor could only find two or three points on which to attack the statement.

A Pathetic Case.

Kingston, Oct. 25.—A pathetic case is reported of an insane patient released from Rockwood Hospital a few days ago. He returned to his old home in Tweed, but, at the sight of old friends and scenes went insane again and was taken back to the asylum yesterday.

William Meagher escaped from the asylum a week ago and cannot be located. The authorities believe that friends in Kingston are hiding him.

Brockville Boy Scouts.

Brockville, Oct. 25.—The boys' scout movement has taken definite form in Brockville and bids fair to be a decidedly popular organization. An enthusiastic meeting, attended by fifty boys together with a number of parents, and presided over by Lt.-Col. Buell was held in the lecture hall of the armories. The preliminary steps ensure the organization of several troops, four of which are already fully manned.

Think Sheldon Went to Europe.

Vesuvius Claims Ten Victims.

MAY MAKE ARRESTS

Some Will Also Be Re-examined In All Probability When Inquest Into Death of Lizzie Anderson Is Resumed—Jardine Mother and Son Will Testify—Mr. Blackstock Will Hurry Things Up.

Goderich, Oct. 25.—That an arrest may follow the conclusion of the inquest into the murder of Lizzie Anderson to-night is the general impression here, and, though Provincial Inspectors Greer and Boyd will make no positive assertions in this direction, they hint that a re-examination of some of the witnesses by George Tate Blackstock, must connect a person or persons so closely with the tragedy as to require some explaining.

More than twenty new witnesses have been added to the list since the last adjournment was made on account of the absence of Mrs. Jardine and her son Frank, for whom bench warrants were issued, to secure their testimony as material witnesses. All told, about forty witnesses have been summoned, according to Coroner Holmes.

The tremendous examination will still be along the line of ascertaining precisely the movements of Edward (Punk) Jardine and his elder brother, Thomas, on the fatal night.

One very significant thing is alleged to have been brought to light by Inspectors Greer and Boyd in the past week, namely, that Edward Jardine was in possession of a knife on the day that Lizzie Anderson must have been murdered. The crown investigators have secured several witnesses who will swear to this, though young Jardine himself has sworn that he did not have a knife, nor was in the habit of carrying one. A knife has been found near the abandoned cellar, in where the mutilated girl was found, but to this circumstances not much weight it attached, as it is believed it was placed there since the tragedy.

Evidence will also be put in to show that Edward Jardine was seen with the Anderson girl outside the fair grounds on the night she was missed from home, while witnesses, who swore to seeing them together between 8.15 and 9.30, will also be re-examined. This is in rebuttal of Jardine's and his relatives that he was home at 8.

Mr. Blackstock is going to try and finish up the enquiry in one day.

A Bold Threat.

Denver, Col., Oct. 25.—Prediction by a national official of a labor union, that the buildings of three local newspapers, whose pressmen are on strike, will encounter destruction before the publishers win, has startled the Denver Trades and Labor Assembly.

The speaker was Albert B. Kreftler, third vice-president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, who appeared before the assembly, asking aid in the strike.

"I tell you the buildings will blow up before this thing is settled the way the publishers want to settle it," he said. He finished his speech amid silence.

A Mysterious Disease.

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 25.—Trinity College, the aristocratic home of sons of wealthy Episcopalians, is threatened with a mysterious epidemic. Twelve members of the Psi Upsilon, a secret society, have been attacked with a peculiar disease which has almost blinded them for two days. Yesterday morning a consultation of three of the leading eye specialists and three leading practitioners of Hartford was held, and it was decided to order the fraternity house quarantined.

Robbed of $10,000.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—J. C. Foster, jr., traveling jewelry salesman, from Columbus, Ohio, was robbed of $10,000 worth of jewelry in the lobby of the Great Northern yesterday.

His neck was gashed. Late last night the man was still alive. He was taken to Victoria Hospital.

Tener, Republican candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, based on the latter's alleged connection with the National Public Utilities Commission. The charge against Van Valkenberg is criminal libel.

Farmers Want Hydro-Power.

Berlin, Oct. 25.—The farmers of Waterloo County have formed an organization and will shortly wait on the Hydro-Electric Commission to learn the cost of power to them. The farmers are very enthusiastic and expect soon to have their homes lighted and stationary machinery run by Niagara power.

Will Deport Insane Man.

Strike-Breakers Beaten.

New York, Oct. 25.—The first trouble between strikers, their sympathizers and the men who have been engaged by the U. S. A Liberal Convention.

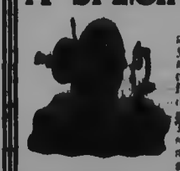
Flesherton, Oct. 25.—On Thursday, Oct. 27, a Liberal convention will be held at Maxwell for the riding of East Grey. A candidate will be elected to contest the riding for the Legislature at the next election. Hon. A. G. MacKay, W. P. Telford, K.C., and others will address the convention.

An Expensive Fire.

Washington, Oct. 25.—Six billion feet of lumber, valued at $15,000,000, were destroyed in the recent forest fires upon the national forests in Montana and northern Idaho. The total area burned over in this one district was out at 1,250,000 acres.

ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST



Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.

BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS

Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nine-tenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

"THE BETRAYAL"

I watched him bending over the stove, pale, dark-visaged, with the subdued manners and voice which mark the aristocracy of servitude. My employer's confidence in him must be immense, for while he watched over me I was practically in his power.

"Have you been long with the Duke, Grooton?" I asked him.

"Twenty-one years, sir. I left his Grace to go to Lord Chelsford, who found me some work in London."

"Secret service work, wasn't it, Grooton?"

"Yes, sir."

"Interesting?"

"Some parts of it very interesting, sir."

I nodded and drank my coffee. Grooton was watching me with an air of respectful interest.

"You will pardon my remarking it, sir, but I hope you will try and get some sleep during the day. You are very pale this morning, sir."

I looked at the glass, and was startled at my own reflection. This was only my third day, and the responsibilities of my work were heavy upon me. My cheeks were sunken and there were black rings around my eyes.

"I will lie down when I come back Grooton," I answered.

Outside, the fresh morning wind came like a sudden sweet tonic to my jaded nerves. I paused for a moment to face bareheaded the rush of it from the sea. As I stood there, drinking it in, I became suddenly aware of light approaching footsteps. Some one was coming towards the cottage from the Park.

I did not immediately turn my head, but every nerve in my body seemed to stiffen into quivering curiosity. The pathway was a private one leading from the house only to the "Brand," and down the cliff to Braster. It was barely seven o'clock and the footsteps were no labouring man's. I think that I knew very well who it was that came so softly down the cone-strewn path.

We faced one another with little of the mask of surprise. She came like a shadow, flitting between the slender tree trunks out into the sunshine, where for a moment she seemed wan and white. Her dark eyes flashed a greeting at me. I stood cap in hand before her. It was the first time we had met since I had taken up my abode at the "Brand."

"Good morning, Mr. Ducaine," she said. "You need not look at me as though I were a ghost. I always walk before breakfast in the country."

"There is no better time," I answered.

"You look as though you had been up all night," she remarked.

"I had work to finish," Hold her. She nodded.

"So you would have none of my advice, Mr. Secretary," she said softly, coming a little nearer to me. "You are already installed."

"Already at work," I asserted.

She glanced towards the "Brand."

"I hope that you are comfortable," she said. "A couple of hours is short notice in which to make a place habitable."

"Grooton is a magician," I told her. "He has arranged everything."

"He is a wonderful servant," she said thoughtfully.

A white-winged bird floated over our heads and drifted away skywards. She followed it with her eyes.

"You wonder at seeing me so early," she murmured. "Don't you think that it is worth while? Nothing ever seems so sweet as this morning breeze."

I bowed gravely. She was standing bareheaded now at the edge of the cliff, watching the flight of the bird. It was delightful to see the bird. It was delightful to see the faint pink come back to her cheeks with the sting of the salt wind. Nevertheless, I had an idea in my mind that it was not wholly for her health's sake that Lady Angela walked abroad so early.

"Tell me," she said presently, "have you had a visitor this morning?"

"What, at this hour?" I exclaimed.

"There are other early risers besides you and I," she said. "The spinney gate was open, so some one has passed through."

I shook my head.

"I have not seen or heard a soul" I told her. "I have just finished some work, and I am on my way up to the house with it."

"You really mean it?" she persisted.

"Of course I do." I answered her. "Grooton is the only person I have spoken to for at least nine hours. Why do you ask?"

She hesitated.

"My window looks this way," she said, "and I fancied that I saw some one cross the Park while I was dressing. The spinney gate was certainly open."

"Then I fancy that it has been open all night," I declared, "for to the best of my belief no one has passed through it save yourself. May I walk with you back to the house, Lady Angela? There is something which I should very much like to ask you."

She replaced her hat, which she had been carrying in her hand. I stood watching her deft white fingers flashing amongst the thick silky coils of her hair. The extreme slimness of her figure seemed accentuated by her backward poise. Yet, perhaps I had never before properly appreciated its perfect gracefulness.

"I was going farther along the cliffs, she said, "but I will walk some of the way back with you. One minute."

She stood on the extreme edge, and, shading her eyes with her hand, she looked up and down the broad expanse of sand—a great untenanted wilderness. I wondered for whom or what she was looking, but I asked no question. In a few moments she rejoined me, and we turned inland.

"Well," she said, "what is it that you wish to say?"

"Lady Angela," I began, "a few weeks ago there was no one whose prospects were less hopeful than mine. Thanks to your father and Colonel Ray all that is changed. To-day I have a position I am proud of, and important work. Yet I cannot help always remembering that I am holding a post which you warned me against accepting."

"Well?"

"I am very curious," I said. "I have understood your warning. I believe that you were in earnest. Was it that you believed me incapable of untrustworthy, or—"

"You appear to me," she murmured, "to be rather a curious person."

I bent forward and looked into her face. There was in her wonderful eyes a glint of laughter which became her well. She walked with slow, graceful ease, her hands behind her, her head almost on a level with my own. I found myself studying her with a new pleasure. Then our eyes met, and I looked away, momentarily confused. Was it my fancy, or was there a certain measure of rebuke in her cool surprise, a faint indication of her desire that I should remember that she was the Lady Angela Harbevly, and I her father's secretary? I bit my lip. She should not catch me offending again, I determined.

"You must forgive me," I said stiffly, "but your warning seemed a little singular. If you do not choose to gratify my curiosity, it is of no consequence."

"Since you disregarded it," she remarked, lifting her dress from the dew-laden grass on to which we had emerged, "it does not matter, does it? Only you are very young, and you know little of the world. Lord Ronald was your predecessor, and he is in a lunatic asylum. No one knows what lies behind certain unfortunate things which have happened during the last months. There is a mystery which is as yet unsolved."

I smiled.

"In your heart you are thinking," I said, "that such an unsophisticated person as myself will be an easy prey to whatever snares may be laid for me. Is it not so?"

She looked at me with uplifted eyebrows.

"Others of more experience have been worsted," she remarked calmly. "Why not you?"

"If that is a serious question," I said, "I will answer it. Perhaps my very inexperience will be my best friend."

"Yes?"

"Those before me," I continued, "have thought that they knew whom to trust. I, knowing no one, shall trust no one."

"Not even me?" she asked, half turning her head towards me.

"Not even you," I answered firmly. A man's figure suddenly appeared on the left. I looked at him puzzled, wondering whence he had come.

"Here is your good friend, Colonel Mostyn Ray," she remarked, with a note of banter in her tone. "What about him?"

"Not even Colonel Mostyn Ray," I answered. "The notes which I take with me from each meeting are to be read over from my elaboration at the next. Nobody is permitted to hold a pen or to make a note whilst they are being read. Afterwards I have your father's promise that not even he will ask for even a cursory glance at them. I deliver them sealed to Lord Chelsford."

Ray came up to us. His dark eyebrows were drawn close together and I noticed that his boots were clogged with sand. He had the appearance of a man who had been walking far and fast.

"You keep up your good habits, Lady Angela," he said, raising his cap.

"It is my only good one, so I am loth to let it go," she answered. "If you were as gallant as you appear to be energetic," she added, glancing at his boots, "you would have stopped when I called after you, and taken me for a walk."

His eyes shot dark lightnings at her.

"I did not hear you call," he said.

"You had the appearance of a man who intended to hear nothing and see nothing," she remarked coolly. "Never mind! There will be no breakfast for an hour yet. You shall take me on to Braster Hill. Come!"

They left me at a turn in the path. I saw their heads close together in earnest conversation. I went on towards the house.

I entered by the back, and made my way across the great hall, which was still invaded by domestics with brushes and brooms. Taking a small key from my watch-chain, I unfastened the door of a room almost behind the staircase, and pushed it open. The curtains were drawn, and the room itself, therefore, almost in darkness. I carefully locked myself in, and turned up the electric light.

The apartment was a small one, and contained only a few pieces of heavy antique furniture. Behind the curtains were iron shutters. In one corner was a strong safe. I walked to it, and for the first time I permitted my self to think of the combination word. Slowly I fitted it together and the great doors swung open.

There were several padlocked dispatch boxes, and on a shelf above, a bundle of folded papers. I took this bundle carefully out and laid it on the table before me. I was on the point of undoing the red tape with which it was tied, when my fingers became suddenly rigid. I stared at the packet with wide-open eyes. I felt my breath come short and my brain reeling. The papers were there sure enough, but it was not at them that I was looking. It was the double knot in the pink tape which fascinated me.

NEARLY DIED OF STONE IN THE BLADDER
GIN PILLS SAVED HIM
513 JAMES ST., HAMILTON, ONT.
"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of The Bladder—intense pains in back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.
My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once and the attacks were less frequent.
In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I recall how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me." JOHN HERMAN. 46
GIN PILLS are sold at 50c a box—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your dealer does not handle them. Sample box free if you write us, mentioning this paper. Money back if GIN PILLS do not give full satisfaction. National Drug and Chemical Co., Dept. E., Toronto.

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy
Costs Little, But Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.
Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.
You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.
This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.
Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guiaicol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.
This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.
A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

UNCLE SAM'S PRISONERS.

They Travel in Luxury From Washington to Federal Prisons.

"The Leavenworth overland special" is a car which runs every now and then from Washington to a certain rest cure out west with a stone wall around it. The tours are personally conducted and are rapidly becoming famous.

With Uncle Samuel there is no class distinction. It doesn't matter whether he was a "man higher up" or not. He travels like one. He travels to the golden west in a Pullman. He has porters to wait on him and extremely attentive detectives to see that he is comfortable. He lolls in plush swivel chairs, and he dines in those neat little a la carte Pullman buffets on chicken, porterhouse steaks and all the side dishes. He eats what he pleases, and he does not tip the waiter. Neither does he pay the bill. Uncle Sam attends to that. It is a delightful trip that is furnished him in his concluding days of freedom, days he is not likely to forget.

From Washington to Leavenworth is a trip of more than 1,500 miles. On every mile of the journey the wants of Uncle Sam's prisoners and guards are well catered to, as evidenced by the hampers of chicken, beef, ham, eggs, sardines, and so on, down to the more aesthetic delights of the tourist library.

Warden McKee, who has been in charge of the United States jail for several years and who has sent more than 500 convicts to various federal prisons from Washington, said that it is possible to feed the prisoners fried chicken, steaks of various kinds and even a few watermelons for the negro members of the aggregation at a comparatively small cost when the raw food is purchased before leaving Washington. An appropriation of about $30,000 is made each year for this item, and the meals cost only 36 cents each.—Washington Cor. Kansas City Star.

Ocean Derelicts.

Floating wrecks are a serious and constant menace to commerce. There is one bureau of the navy department which keeps track as best it can of these derelicts and whenever practical sends a revenue cutter or the special derelict destroyer Seneca to destroy them or tow them to port. The extent of this work of hunting down waterlogged and abandoned ships is indicated by the fact that during a recent seven year period no fewer than 1,625 derelicts were reported at Washington an average of 232 for each year. A large part of them are lumber laden craft, as other vessels usually go to the bottom when water gets inside. They sometimes drift for great distances, thousands of miles, and remain afloat for years before finally going ashore somewhere or being captured by a government vessel.—Exchange.

Italy's Tax on Salt.

Italy's tax on salt is a grievous burden upon the poor. The profit from the salt monopoly goes to the huge expense of armaments. The armaments are required by the triple alliance, and the triple alliance is required by the position of Italy as a first class power.

Liverpool Market Slow and Easy—Buffalo Higher for Hogs.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 24.—John Rogers & Co., Liverpool, cable to-day that the demand in Birkenhead was very slow, and, altho prices held firm, the tone was weak, and it would not be unexpected if prices came lower. Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 24.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West Market, receipts last week were 2700 cattle, 2250 sheep and lambs, 2675 hogs and 425 calves. Offerings this morning amounted to 1500 cattle, 1800 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 270 calves. The feeling, if any, was inclined to be easier on account of increased offerings, which consisted largely of rough and medium stock. Arrivals from the northwest were large, being over 20 loads, including some Manitoba domestic cattle and ranchers. Choice steers sold at 5½c to 5¾c; good, at 5c to 5¼c; fairly good, at 4½c to 4¾c; fair, at 4c to 4¼c, and common, at 3½c to 3¾c per lb. The market for small meats was steady. Supplies of sheep and lambs were fairly large. Upper Canada lambs sold at 6c to 6¼c, and Quebec stock, 5¼c to 5¾c, while sheep brought from 3½c to 4c per lb. The demand for calves was good and sales of milk fed stock were made at 5½c to 6c per lb., live weight. A decided weak feeling developed for hogs and prices scored a further decline of 50c to 60c per cwt. since last Wednesday, a net drop of $1 to $1.15 since Oct. 1, attributed chiefly to liberal supplies coming forward. A fairly active trade was done with sales of selected lots at $8 per cwt.

Children Burned to Death.

Ottawa, Oct. 25.—Two young children of George Tremble, a farmer of North Gower, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed his farm buildings. The fire was caused by a five-year-old boy throwing lighted matches in a wood box.

I tried doctors but got no relief. I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after three weeks I was feeling much better, and now I am well again."—Mrs. BESSIE BILY, Dovedale, Sask., Canada.

Another Woman Cured.

MAY BUY BIT OF MAINE.

Canada Could Use Strip of Land for Railway Purposes.

Ottawa, Oct. 25.—The story is again revived that one of the things that will be discussed between the United States representatives and the representatives of the Canadian Dominion, if they enter into negotiations with regard to reciprocity will be the sale by the United States to Canada of a small portion of the State of Maine, so as to give an improved all-Canadian railway route between the Quebec and New Brunswick systems. For instance, a much better line for the Canadian Transcontinental could be secured in this way at a very considerable cut-off in distance. The territory that would be involved is hardly settled at all, and if settled is by French-Canadians, so that there would be no change of flag as far as the people are concerned, and a substantial benefit would be acquired by Canada and no loss sustained by the United States.

Panama Canal Purchase.

Washington, Oct. 25.—The final effort by the Federal Government to uphold the validity of the indictment in the New York federal courts of the Press Publishing Co., on a charge of libel, growing out of the publication of an article in The New York World, on the purchase of the Panama Canal, was made yesterday in oral argument before the Supreme Court of the United States.

The article in question was printed in the heat of the Presidential campaign of 1908. It charged that Charles P. Taft, Douglas Robinson and Wm Nelson Cromwell, with J. Pierpont Morgan and others, obtained control of the Panama Canal route for $3,000,000, and, through their intimacy with Theodore Roosevelt, then President of the United States, and Wm. H. Taft, then secretary of war, sold the property to the United States at a profit of $36,000,000. Much attention was paid to the case by President Roosevelt, during his campaign and it was even made the subject of a special message to Congress by him.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Miss Hattie Megill, a trained nurse, died suddenly at Aurora.

Dr. Mason, M.P.P., East Victoria, was seriously injured in a runaway near Minden.

Mrs. Kelly, wife of William Kelly ex-chairman of the Board of Education, dropped dead at Kingston.

President Falconer of Toronto University gave the address at the opening of the theological faculty of Queen's last night.

The Grand Trunk is applying again to have the charter amended so as to do away with the obligation to give a third-class passenger fare.

The Italian Ministry of the Interior last evening received news of a tidal wave at Casamicciola, on the Island of Ischia, that drowned 200 persons.

The remains found in a vacant lot at Westmount have been identified as those of Cecile Michaud, a girl of 13. Two men are under arrest on a charge of murder.

A report was current yesterday that the Pope was indisposed from an attack of the gout. This is declared to be unfounded. His holiness held his usual receptions.

Constable Levesque of the Levis' police force, yesterday morning found a stick of dynamite under the house of Capt. Alphonse Bourget at Bienville, Levis, at present under construction.

South African Hero Buried.

Kingston, Oct. 25.—With full military honors, attended by various branches of the military service and prominent citizens, the remains of the late Major Bruce Carruthers, the South African hero, were laid to rest in Cataraqui Cemetery. There were walking in the general procession 200 members of the rifles. Trumpeters sounded the last post, and the hero of Hart's River was left to sleep with his kindred dust.

Rev. Dr. MacGillivray of Chalmer's Presbyterian Church conducted the ceremony. The streets were lined with citizens as the cortege passed along, and business was suspended. The pall-bearers were: Majors Robertson and Wolfe, R.M.C.; Major Panet, R.C.H.A.; Major Hundel, district signaler; Captains Dawson and Mowat, 14th Regiment, P.W.O.R.; Major Ross, Army Medical Corps, and Capt. A. De M Bell, C.P.A.S. corps.

Set Her Dress Afire.

New York, Oct. 25.—A three-year-old girl, locked up in a Mott street tenement with her baby sister, set her dress afire while playing with matches yesterday. The screams of the children alarmed the women neighbors, but they were not strong enough to force the door, and the children could not open it. One woman finally crawled out along the fire escape and entered through a window. She found the little girl ablaze, and she died before help reached her. The baby was not burned.

Their father, Michael de Luca, is locked up in the Portchester jail, charged with larceny. The mother is obliged to work, and their aged grandmother left the little ones to go in search of food.

Secularizing the Schools.

Lisbon, Oct. 25.—The secularization of the schools involves the replacement of religious instruction therein by systematic teaching of individual and civic morality. This is strongly favored by the reformers heading the Government, who argue that the greatest peril to the young republic would be passed, if they succeeded in educating the children so that they would apply the same honesty to political as to private life. It has been decided to suppress the faculty of theology at the University of Coimbra, and abolish the taking of oaths by professors and students.

The Portuguese embassy to the Vatican has been reduced to a legation.

Killed on the Track.

Glencoe, Oct. 25.—Sunday morning, the section men picked up the mangled form of a well-dress man three miles west of Newbury. By the money found on him and the cut of his clothes it is thought that he is an American. He is about thirty years old, five feet eight inches tall, fair complexion, blue eyes, smooth face, and apparently was using his handkerchief as a cap. The latter had an ink mark J.S. His four upper teeth were gold on gold plates. Dr. J. Walker will hold an inquest.

AN APPEAL TO REASON

TWELVE months ago, after prolonged investigation and experiment, we pinned our faith to the Knight motor as the greatest improvement of the decade in automobile construction.

Many believed us, bought cars and are to-day congratulating themselves on their judgment.

There were croakers then, perhaps there are to-day, but we hear less of them.

THEY SAID—The engine was an experiment—forgetting that it had stood the greatest engine test on record before the Royal Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland.

THEY SAID—It will not stand up on Canadian roads; although they knew a challenge of $1,250 was open to anyone who wished to measure his motor against the Knight for reliability.

THEY SAID—That it would not be taken up in Europe, and that the Daimler Company were about to discard it. We knew at the time—and anyone can verify it now—that the leading concerns of six of the countries of Europe have adopted the Knight motor.

THEY SAID—No one in the United States would take it up. We know that over twenty of the largest concerns in the United States have from time to time applied for consideration in the American rights. And we know to-day that leading United States firms will announce 1912 models with Knight motors in another twelve months despite the fact that the agents of some of these concerns profess great skepticism about the Knight motor to-day.

We seldom refer to or bother about the suggestions of interested opponents. We want, however, to repeat our conviction, formed a year ago, and confirmed by twelve months' of experience in the factory, on the road, and in the users' hands:

That the Knight motor far surpasses the old valve type, and that it is only a question of time before it entirely supersedes it in all high-grade cars. Get a car that will be up-to-date the longest.

Our 1911 model is out, but our 1910 users can smile, for their car is up to date still. 1911 is only a refinement in details on 1910.

The same motor. The same body lines, with high front doors, now pretty universally copied.

Is not this the type of car to buy?

The Sir Thomas More Is Not the Only Picture Carter Has "Found."

Mr. J. Purvis (or Perves) Carter, the "English art expert," who is alleged to have discovered in Montreal a portrait of Sir Thomas More from the brush of Albrecht Durer, is given to discoveries of this nature. Last spring he circulated a story that he had discovered portraits of King George III. and Queen Charlotte by Sir Joshua Reynolds at Fredericton, N.B. Commenting on the discovery at the time The Fredericton Mail said: "Even assuming the statement to be correct it can hardly be classed as a valuable discovery, for in the hand book of Fredericton, first issued by the Tourist Association some years ago, it is stated there that these pictures are the work of that artist. But the matter appears to be open to very considerable doubt notwithstanding all the expert knowledge brought to bear on the matter by Mr. Carter." The paper then published the following extract from "The Lives of the Judges of New Brunswick": "Much speculation has at various times been indulged, as to what artist painted the portraits of King George III. and Queen Charlotte in the Legislative Assembly at Fredericton. The supposition that they are from the brush of Sir Joshua Reynolds must be dismissed as wholly inadmissible. There is no evidence to warrant it, and the circumstances point in another direction. The strong probability is that they were painted by Allan Ramsay, who for years was a great favorite at Court, and principal painter to the King. . . . It is stated that His Majesty invariably present portraits of himself and the Queen to all his ambassadors and governors of colonies, and that in consequence, Ramsay had a busy time in manufacturing these royal effigies. Ramsay met with a painful and unfortunate accident in the dislocation of his right arm, which seriously interfered with his professional work. Seeking health, he in consequence made a third visit to Rome, leaving to his pupil, Philip Reinagle, an orders to complete during his absence 'fifty pairs of Kings and Queens at ten guineas each,' which was afterwards increased to thirty guineas. It took six years to complete this order, and Reinagle's imitation of Ramsay's style was such that the work of the pupil could not be distinguished from that of the master. It is quite evident the portraits at Fredericton are from Ramsay's brush, or from that of Reinagle, with subordinate parts filled in by assistants. The writer has seen the portraits of the King at Oxford, England; in the National Gallery, London; at Halifax, Nova Scotia; and at Fredericton, and the great similarity in treatment is almost conclusive evidence they are by the same artist."

Booms the Climate.

Following on Sir Wilfrid Laurier's eloquent eulogy of the Canadian climate at Red Deer recently, which has received wide circulation in the press, London, Eng., has had a visit from R. F. Stupart, the director of Canada's splendid meteorological service. In an interview with a reporter, Mr. Stupart said:

"The Canadian climate is not something we need be ashamed of; it is one of the assets of the country."

Mr. Stupart went into a variety of details which will be invaluable to those in England who are stimulating the emigration movement, but which are well-known to Canadians. I will only quote what he said regarding the area which has been so prominently brought into notice by Earl Grey's tour and the movement for the railway to Hudson Bay.

"We established fully equipped stations last year in the valley of the Mackenzie River from Northern Alberta right to the Arctic coast line. We are thus gradually extending the network of stations and will know a good deal about the climate of that northern region very shortly. There is, however, every reason to suppose that grain will ripen in the valley of the Mackenzie river very nearly, if not quite as far as the Arctic circle. That does not hold good as you come eastward towards Hudson Bay. The prevalence of eastern winds in the region of the 'barren lands' keeps the temperature rather low, and there is liable to be a great deal of rainy, drizzly weather. Westward towards the Mackenzie River the climate is quite favorable for settlement, and I think that far north country is a region which will be found to be quite an important part of the Dominion."

A Neat Retort.

Thirty-five years ago Winnipeg was a small place, but it had some choice spirits in it all the same. One of the pioneers was William Gomez da Fonseca, a native of the island of Jamaica, who in spit of his Spanish name was as good a British subject as the best. It was when Jamaica rum was a favorite tipple, commonly called "Jamaica" for short.

On the occasion of a public meeting Mr. Fonseca was advocating a plan for public improvements. Another prominent citizen came in with, as Artemus Ward would say, considerable liquor concealed about his person. He resented the speaker's remarks and interrupted on every opportunity.

"Why should we listen to this man just fresh from Jamaica?" he demanded.

"What the gentleman says," retorted Mr. Fonseca, "is partially true, but I will leave it to you if he is not fresher from Jamaica than I am."

Amid the laughter that followed the interrupter subsided. The "upstart fresh from Jamaica" stayed with the West and Fonseca street is now one of the leading thoroughfares of the Prairie Capital.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

GOD'S MESSAGE OF COMFORT TO THE JEWS.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."—Isaiah xl., 1, 2.

London, Oct. 23.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle yesterday addressed an immense audience in the world's greatest Auditorium, the Royal Albert Hall. Many of his audience were Jews, attracted by the liberal extracts from Pastor Russell's sermons which have been appearing in the Jewish papers all over the world. The discourse was full of comforting assurances (both to the Jew and Gentile) of the glorious outcome to the Divine Plan, as respects our world and its inhabitants. We report the address only in part, as follows:

There can be no doubt that the words of our text apply, not to Spiritual Israel and the heavenly Jerusalem, but to the Seed of Jacob, for many centuries travailing in pain—a nation without a land, people possessing most wonderful promises, yet enjoying none of them—a people scattered amongst all other peoples; yet, in harmony with the Divine promise made at the beginning of their organization, they have been preserved separate and distinct from all other nations! The Jews are a miracle in themselves. They witness to the civilized world God's promises and the power thereof in the human mind. As foretold in the Scriptures for long centuries they have had no Prophet, no Priest, no ephod, no vision from God, no revelation. The people to whom at one time belonged the honor of being the only people to whom the Divine purposes were revealed have for more than eighteen centuries been left destitute of any evidence of Divine favor, except in this one fact, that their solidarity as a people is preserved.

We are not of those who rail against the Jew; who cry out, "Christ-killers; the vengeance of God is upon you, and what you have suffered is only a foretaste of more awful sufferings for all eternity!" Thank God, No! We have no such evil sentiment in our heart. We have nothing for the Jew but sympathy, even while in him, as in others of Adam's children, we may see much to reprehend, nevertheless, we also see his commendable qualities. Among others, we see the quality which God so greatly appreciated in Abraham, namely, faith in his God and in the Divine promises. Such a faith has inspired "God's Chosen People" to wait for his promised Messianic Kingdom, lo, these many centuries—through all kinds of discouragements, disappointments and persecutions.

The long-promised time of Israel's exaltation as the channel of Messianic blessing to mankind is near—it hasteth greatly. What though there shall be another and great spasm of tribulation in conjunction with the birth of the New Order of things? Beyond the sighing and the crying, the morning dawns—the glorious day in which the Sun of Righteousness shall chase from the world all the shadows of death and despair, which sin and its penalty have brought upon mankind! What though the Scriptures tell us that Israel is yet to have "The time of Jacob's trouble" in connection with the world's great time of trouble impending. None of these things shall hinder us from rejoicing in the New Heavens and the New Earth, which God declares he is about to create and put into control of our world—"Be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create" (Isaiah lxv., 18).

The New Heavens and the New Earth are but symbolical terms for the consideration of that New Era, in which there will be a new social order, as well as a new ecclesiastical system, eternal in the heavens.

The time has come when our text is having its fulfillment. The shining of the lamp of Truth upon the prophetic page shows us that the great clock of the Universe is marking the hour when he whose right it is shall take to himself his great power and reign. Ah, yes! We remember that it is written that then the nations shall be angry, and God's wrath shall be manifest, and then the time shall come for the judgment of the dead and the reward of all, both small and great. But we are glad, nevertheless, that the "times of the Gentiles" are nearly at an end and the time of Messiah's theocratic government is at hand—For he must reign until he shall have put down all unrighteousness and insubordination, until he shall have caused every knee to bow and every tongue to confess to the glory of God the Father.

First in order of the Kingdom work will be the binding of Satan—the work of a heavenly, and not of an earthly king. Gradually, in the judgments, decrees, rewards, punishments of mankind and the banishing of sin and death will the great King of Glory reveal his own gracious character and the Father's righteousness to the children of men. Gradually all will have the eyes of their understanding opened to see, not only the Father of all in his true character, but also the Son in his glorious majesty—the Conqueror, "who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame," and hence is at the right hand of Divine majesty and entrusted with the pouring out of the Divine blessing upon Israel, and, though Israel, extending that blessing to every nation.

It has escaped Christendom in general until now that the Divine promise to Abraham is to be fulfilled through two Seeds—only a heavenly class, the other an earthly class, with Messiah the Head over all. For eighteen centuries God favored the Seed of Abraham, the nation of Israel. Unfaithfulness they had, reproofs in righteousness; yet in all that time they had also Divine favor, as represented in their Law and in the Prophecies and in the privileges which came to them under the Law Covenant, in that they had an annual Atonement Day, which continued to them Divine favor. That period of favor, explain it how we may, began to wane about the time of Jesus' death. It was completely removed from them in the desolation of their land by the Roman army A. D. 70. Now a parallel time has been reached, as stated in our text. Hence it is time for the return of God's favor, as herein mentioned. The favor already is returning.

The Jew has not been so comfortable, nor so favorably fixed as he is to-day, in more than eighteen centuries. But his blessing is only beginning. Shortly Divine favor, in God's due time, will accomplish for his Chosen People all the previous promises of the Law and of the Prophets. Already the Jew is awakening to a realization of this great Truth. Zionism, which started as a political movement, is about to bud and blossom into a religious movement and the blessing of Divine Providence will so order their affairs. The words of the Book, the words of Divine promise, so long read ignorantly and blindly, are about to become luminous and constitute the light which will direct them in the ways of the Lord—leading on to the rehabilitation of Jerusalem and to the attainment of loftier ideals amongst the Jewish people. A voice is sounding from the wilderness, and the Jews everywhere are hearkening to it. It does not call them to become Christians, but to remain Jews and to realize, as Jews, the ideals set before them by the Lord in the Law and by the Prophets. To all those exercised thereby a great blessing is near, which will more than compensate for the sorrows of the past. Neither by sword, nor guns nor dreadnoughts, neither by flying airships, nor torpedoes will Israel's great victory be won, neither by money power and worshipping of the golden calf of finance, nor by trusting in the arm of flesh, but by looking to the Lord, from whom will come their help.

Messiah's Spiritual Empire, about to be established, will bind Satan, restrain every evil and lift up a standard for the people, blessing Israel and establishing with them the New (Law) Covenant instead of the Old Law Covenant—under the better Mediator, still more capable than the great Moses under the greater King, still more wise than Solomon and still more beloved of God than David. This great Celestial Empire will be established with great authority in the world by a time of trouble, a time of earthly distress, which the prophecies picture as terrible—a short reign of anarchy. Jews and Gentiles will be responsible, rich and poor, for the bringing to pass of this awful trouble, by reason of the selfishness which at present is governing the world and which will be used of the Lord to wreck our present grand civilization—grand at least on its surface and in its aspirations and pretensions. A Socialistic artillery of words and ecclesiastical bonds of similar nature will only aggravate the strife. Financial weights and levers will have much to do with the great crash of the forces of civilization in this near approaching cataclysm of trouble, in which the reign of sin, inequity, injustice, selfishness, shall forever fall, to rise no more; and the present religious systems also shall be found wanting and pass away. For these old system, symbolically the heavens and earth of the present time, will be substituted the New Heavens and the New Earth—the Church glorified beyond the vail as the Bride of the great Messiah, and, Society on earth reorganized, will constitute the New Earth, wherein will dwell righteousness. The transition will be but a momentary ordeal, as compared with the glorious eternity of blessing under Messiah's righteous supervision. "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth."

The perplexing thought with our Jewish friends, as well as with Christians, is, If these things be so; if Messiah's Kingdom is yet to be established, as the Jews contemplated, only on a spiritual plane instead of an earthly one; and if God's purpose is to use those anciently favored people as the channels of his blessing in the future, why has there been so long delay?

We answer, This is what the Scriptures term The Mystery—the matter which God did not reveal directly either to Abraham or through any of the Prophets. Indirectly he hinted at it, saying to Abraham, "Thy Seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and as the sand of the seashore for multitude." But Abraham did not discern, nor did others, that these two illustrations belonged, not to the same people, but to two different Israels. The earthly promises belonged to natural Israel. Eventually all mankind, blessed under the Messianic reign, will become Israelites—of the Seed of Abraham. Thus Abraham's "Seed shall be as the sand of the seashore for multitude." And they must all have the faith of Abraham and his obedience ere they can reach perfection as members of his Seed. First in the order of blessing will come the Ancient Worthies—Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the Prophets and holy ones of the past. These will be raised from the dead by the power of God—not imperfect and fallen, but perfect; fully up to all the glorious ideas of their minds aforetime. This will be their reward for having walked by faith and not by sight. Thus we read, Instead of being the fathers, they shall be the children, whom Messiah will make princes in all the earth—his representatives in power, in rulership, in authority (Psalms xlv, 16). At that time the blessing shall return to Israel that has been taken from them for nearly eighteen centuries—God's special favor. Under their New Covenant they shall be blessed; their eyes shall be opened; "they shall look upon him whom they pierced"—they shall mourn [illegible]

They will say, This is our ruler. We have waited for him, and he will save us (Zechariah xii, 10).

With shame true Christians must admit that most atrocious crimes were committed in the name of Jesus during the "Dark Ages." Worse than that! The horrible misrepresentation of all that the name of Jesus stands for still continues. Witness, for instance, the injustices practiced in the name of Christianity against the Jew in Russia for years past, and in various nations in remoter times. Witness the fact also that only two months ago the so-called Christians of Roumania acted like veritable demons toward their Jewish neighbors. Well-authenticated accounts tell that the Jewish cemetery was despoiled. Many of those buried within the two preceding months were dug up and the putrid and mangled corpses thrown on the steps and in the door-yards of their families. Can we wonder that the Jew has come to have a hatred for the word Christian and for the name Jesus?

The name Jesus, as is well known is but another form for Joshua, which signifies Deliverer. The name Christ is the Greek equivalent for the word Messiah. Every Jew, rightly informed respecting the character and the teachings of Jesus, is bound to respect him and his immediate followers as amongst the grandest Jews that ever lived. They must not be judged according to their perversion of their teachings, so common amongst Christians. And it should not be forgotten that while the masses of Christendom have misrepresented their teaching, doctrines and practices, there has been throughout the entire age a saintly few who have closely followed in the footsteps of Jesus.

In my preaching I do not urge upon the Jews to become Christians; but I seek to hold forth the Divine standard for them and to assist them to get ready for the fulfillment of the glorious promises which are theirs. That the due time for the fulfillment of these is at hand is the comfort we offer them, in harmony with our text. The Prophet declares that it will be after their return to their own land, and after the great time of trouble which is now impending upon Christendom, that the Jew will recognize that the great Messiah of glory, the great Michael of Daniel xii, 1, for whose Kingdom they have been waiting, is none other than the "Man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all men" eighteen centuries ago. God will then blessedly open their eyes of understanding. As The Prophet declares, "They shall look upon him whom they pierced"; they will then see the identity between the Jesus who was sacrificed for the sins of Israel and the world and the Messiah of Glory, whose Kingdom will use Israel in the blessing of the world.

Meantime, what has God wrought? Ah, this, again, we say is the Mystery! Here and there from Jew and Gentile, saintly characters have been sought and found by the preaching of the message of Christ, even though that message frequently was dimmed by earthly imperfections and blemishes by erroneous representations. Those saintly ones will be sharers with Messiah in Divine blessings on the spirit plane, mentioned to Abraham under the figure that his "Seed shall be as the stars of heaven." But under what conditions do these attain a spiritual inheritance like unto the angels and far above them? We answer that the spirit nature is the divine reward of a special obedience. Our race was not created on the heavenly plane nor for a heavenly nature; but of the earth earthy. And its salvation from sin will bring it to the full perfection of human nature and to the full enjoyment of a world-wide Eden. The Spiritual Seed of Abraham is to be composed of Messiah and the Elect Little Flock of saintly footstep followers. The price of their exaltation is their consecration unto death and faithfulness to that Vow. These are the Jewels mentioned by the Lord to the Prophet—"Gather together my saints unto me, said the Lord; those who have made a Covenant with me by sacrifice"; "They shall be mine, in that day when I make up my jewels."

Languages in the British Isles.

Has anybody ever reckoned how many languages are spoken in the British Isles? Few people would put the number as high as seven. But take a census thus: English, Welsh in Wales, Erse in Ireland, Manx in the Isle of Man (church services in Manx were discontinued there but recently). Gaelic in Scotland (six weeks ago at Oban this writer heard maidservants gossiping in that tongue), French in the Channel Islands and Cornish was spoken in Cornwall far more recently than either historians or the public know. The total is seven languages for the British Isles, and yet the Englishman is the poorest linguist in the world.—London Spectator.

Honey With Meat.

Old-time inhabitants of England had a decidedly sweeter tooth than most moderns have. In Tudor days it was the general practice to pour honey over the meat and honey or sugar was used in so many dishes (to say nothing of being mingled with the wine) that it is on record that the teeth of most people were black in consequence. Most of the old dishes would be too rich to-day, for oysters were stewed in wine, pigeons stuffed with gooseberries, grapes boiled in butter and mutton was stuffed with oysters.

Volcano Made by Man.

At Brule, France, is the most remarkable volcano made by man. Originally it was a mass of coal, millions of tons. One day about a century ago the coal caught fire, and it has never ceased burning. The summit of the smouldering mass has a genuine crater.

WAS SWEPT OVERBOARD

Rumor Current That Fishing Boat With Twenty-Four Men Aboard Is Wrecked — Regulus Breaks Tail-Shaft and While Men Are Making Attempts to Get Ashore Are Carried Off by Seas.

St. John's, Nfld., Oct. 25.—News of the wreck of the steamer Regulus, bound from Belle Island to Sydney, with the loss of 19 men of the crew, was received here yesterday.

The Regulus has been running between Newfoundland ports, Sydney, C.B., and New York and Philadelphia. She broke her tail shaft off the Bay of Bulls, 36 miles from here, during a heavy storm on Sunday, while bound from Belle Island to Sydney. The accident was reported here, and a tugboat went to her assistance and picked her up. The storm increased and four hawsers parted, and the Regulus was lost in the fog and darkness.

The tug found her at daylight, a total wreck at the entrance of Shoal Bay. The tug learned that 19 of the crew were swept into the sea and drowned in attempting to reach shore. When the tug left the steamer she appeared to be breaking up.

The Regulus was 869 net tons burden and was owned by Harvey & Co. of St. John's, Nfld.

Fears for Safety of Vessels.

Kingston, Jamaica, Oct. 25.—Fears are entertained for the safety of several schooners that left American ports weeks ago with cargoes of lumber, consigned to Kingston.

The schooner Earl of Aberdeen arrived Sunday night from New Orleans. Her sail, steering gear and the bulwark rail were carried away during the hurricane off Cuba and the water tanks were damaged. The captain reports that he did not sight any of the other schooners which left gulf ports before he sailed and were bound for Kingston.

Fishing Schooner Sunk?

Boston, Oct. 25.—An unconfirmed rumor says that the Lucania, a fishing schooner owned by Sylvanus Smith & Co. of Gloucester, has gone down at sea, with her crew of 24 men.

The Gloucester Board of Trade has heard the report, but doubts its accuracy, as do mariners here.

Mail Steamer Wrecked.

London, Oct. 25. The Portuguese mail steamer Lisbon has been wrecked with a loss of three lives, according to a cablegram to Lloyds from Cape Town, South Africa, yesterday.

Man Fell Overboard.

Port Stanley, Oct. 25.—Joseph Fairley, a fisherman on the tug Hattie Berry, Capt. William Berry, fell overboard and was drowned yesterday, while the boat was about eight miles off here. It is thought that while stepping from the pilot house on to the deck, the boat lurched to one side, and threw him over, although there was not a heavy sea running.

Every effort was put forth to save him. The boat swung around as quick as possible and went back, but, when about 100 feet from him he was seen to go down.

Fairley's home is in Trenton, N.J. He came here about two years ago. He was about 50 years of age. Not three weeks ago one of his brothers was killed in a railroad wreck.

Steamer Langham Burned.

Duluth, Oct. 25.—The steamer Langham, 300 feet long, owned by the L. Adams Co. of Detroit, and with a grain carrying record, burned to the water's edge off Keweenawa Point Sunday afternoon. She was bound up the lakes for Port Arthur with a cargo of coal, and passed the Soo last Tuesday, but had not been reported since then.

When the fire broke out on the Langham, the anchors caught, and it was impossible to beach the ship. The crew, seventeen men and one woman, took to the yawls, after opening the safety valves to prevent the boilers blowing up. The sailors kept near the burning craft until it sank.

Capt. J. H. Sinclair of Port Huron was in charge. Most of the crew lost their personal effects. The boat is a total loss.

Will Revert to Government.

Washington, Oct. 25.—A contract has been made by the Government of Costa Rica with Edmund J. Hess, an English subject, to lay one or more submarine cables between Port Limon and Colon, and to operate them for fifteen years, after which time they are to become Government property, at a price to be determined by arbitration.

Arm Ground Off.

Belleville, Oct. 25.—Frank Kyle, a middle-aged man employed at the Lehigh Cement Works, was yesterday morning the victim of a fatal accident. He was engaged about a mixer when his hand became caught, and the arm was virtually ground off to the shoulder, and the flesh about the right breast torn off.

Crippen Hangs November 5.

London, Oct. 25.—Dr. Hawley H. Crippen, convicted of the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore, the actress, will be hanged on Nov. 5. The date originally announced was Nov. 15, but yesterday the sheriff advanced the day one week.

The "Candy Bandit."

WATER COMMISSIONERS REQUEST FOR $20,000 WAS DEFERRED BY THE COUNCIL

Finance Committee Were Apparently Labouring Under a Misunderstanding as to Why the Commissioners Want the Money.

The members of the Water Commissioners left last night's meeting of the City Council rather prematurely. When they departed they were under the impression that their request that a by-law providing for the issuing of debentures for $20,000 be passed, was being carried out. Had they remained a little longer they would have seen that the by-law was left over until another meeting of the Council.

The three commissioners, Messrs. T. E. Matthews, chairman, W. H. Moore and W. H. Hill were present to urge upon the Council the necessity of issuing debentures for $20,000 to pay for work done on the streets in mains, etc., during the past two years. This was a somewhat different outlet for the money than the Council had understood from Mr. W. H. Moore's statements at the meeting of the Finance committee on Friday night. The members of the committee were under the impression from what Mr. Moore said on that occasion that the money was needed to pay for the excess in the cost of the new waterworks dam. They were somewhat surprised to find last night that this was a mistake and the money was to cover what work had been done in the way of mains, extensions, etc., and which had been paid for out of the surplus.

The Council decided that it would be better to defer the matter to another meeting.

Mr. Matthews in explaining the matter to the Council said that in June last the commissioners had asked the Council to pass a by-law to authorize the issue of $2000 debentures to pay for work done in 1908 and 1909. In 1908 over $12,000 had been spent on work on the streets. Last year it was thought that they would receive $18,000 or $18,000. However, a large water main had to be constructed to the Peterborough Lumber Co., which cost several thousand dollars and other expenditures had to be made with the result that they had spent $21,000 last year, or $33,000 in two years. Unless the Council would authorize the issuing of debentures for $20,000, the commissioners would not be able to pay interest and sinking fund. The money would be spent for work done on the streets and not in any other way. "We want the money, and if you don't provide it, we will simply have to stop operations on the street. Not one cent of the contingent fund has been used on the work on the dam."

Ald. Hicks remarked that the Finance committee had been given to understand by Mr. Moore that the money was required to pay for the excess on the new dam.

Mr. Moore explained that he had not intended to leave this impression with the Council.

Mr. W. H. Hill reiterated Mr. Matthews's statements that not a cent of the contingent fund had gone into the dam. The money asked for was to replace money already spent on extensions, new mains, etc. The commissioners had been drawing upon their surplus for this purpose.

Ald. Gillespie moved, seconded by Ald. Duffus that a by-law be passed authorizing the issuing of debentures for $20,000.

Ald. Bradburn was reluctant to introduce the by-law. "I don't like this way of doing business," he remarked. "They should come and get their $10,000 each year."

The mayor pointed out that the commissioners would only have to leave the money lying in the bank.

Chairman Matthews agreed with His Worship. "Unless we get the money, we will not supply the people with the water that the city owns," he remarked.

Ald. Bradburn introduced the by-law and when its first reading commenced, the Commissioners withdrew.

"It's not passed yet," remarked Ald. Hicks, but the commissioners merely smiled and left the Council chamber.

It did not pass either. Ald. Hicks remarked that if the money was to be used for the purpose of paying for work already done on the streets, it was all right. He asked the City Solicitor if the money which was raised from these debentures could be added to the contingent fund and afterwards devoted to the excess on the new dam.

City Solicitor Hall explained that it could be so used up to $5,000.

"Then I am against the by-law," remarked Ald. Hicks, and Ald. Duncan endorsed his opinion.

Ald. Butler, on the other hand, favoured the granting of the request of the commissioners.

Ald. Hicks moved, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the matter be referred to a special committee of the Council and that the water commissioners be asked to attend.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Matthews stated during the discussion that the cost of the new dam would exceed the estimates, by what amount he was unable to say.

Alderman Morgan Thinks Prices Paid for Eggs and Chickens Ridiculous in Proportion to Size

WANTS ACTION TAKEN

Ald. Morgan thinks that the hens and chickens of Peterborough county are derelict in their duties. The worthy chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee believes that the eggs laid by the former are not large enough, and that the latter are too sparrow-like in their proportions.

At least at last night's meeting of the Council Ald. Morgan remarked that the prices paid for eggs by the dozen, and for chickens by the pair, were ridiculous in view of the size of some of the articles offered. He wanted to know if the Council could not pass a by-law making it compulsory to sell eggs, fowl, etc., by the pound.

No action was taken last night, but Ald. Morgan will get some information from the city solicitor and will likely be heard from again on this subject.

MISS LENEVE IS NOW FREE

Acquitted on The Charge Of Being An Accessory In The Death Of Mrs. Crippen—Jury Brings In Verdict After Brief Deliberation

VERDICT POPULAR

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 25. The jury in the Le Neve case has brought in a verdict of "not guilty" in the charge against her of being an accessory in the murder of Mrs. Crippen.

When the verdict was brought in there was an attempt at applause, which the court officials promptly stopped. It is evident that the sympathy of the crowded court room was with the prisoner.

Witness after witness was heard, but the prosecution did not probe their evidence as deeply as in the Crippen case. Barrister Arthur Newton made an earnest plea for the prisoner. Lord Alverstone's address was very mild.

Miss Leneve was well dressed. She wore a gown of deep blue, a jaunty automobile bonnet and a heavy veil.

When the jury returned after a few minutes deliberation and said "not guilty" the prisoner was almost hysterical with joy. Her aged father and mother were first to congratulate her. She left the court room with them and entering a taxicab they

"AN EPIDEMIC OF MURDERS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY"

Says Chancellor Sir John Boyd in His Address to the Grand Jury at the Opening of Fall Assizes To-day..."Wives and Mothers Being Killed By Their Own Kith and Kin" ...Deline Case Suspended.

Only one charge of murder was laid before the Grand Jury for investigation at the opening of the Fall Assizes of the High Court, this afternoon at one o'clock, namely, that of James Gorham, charged with killing his mother. Chancellor Sir John Boyd, who is presiding, explained that the Crown was not ready with its evidence in Hugh Deline's, and there is a probability of the case being left over until another session. However, His Lordship stated that he might be ready to address them on it at the conclusion of the hearing of the other cases.

The Fall Assizes opened at one o'clock, with a large number of people in the court room, and quite an array of leading barristers, among them being E. V. Meredith, K.C., of London, Ont., Crown Prosecutor; Crown Attorney R. E. Wood, J. V. Payne, Campbellford; D. O'Connell, S. T. Medd, F. D. Kerr and G. H. Edmison.

The Grand Jury is composed as follows:

J. Comstock, (foreman); A. G. Shearer, Robert Beach, J. E. Braund, A. E. Coulthard, Thomas Graham, W. J. Porter, Sherman Garbutt, James Thorne, Robert Horner, Alan Caldwell, Thos. Dale, and Wm. Nelson.

His Lordship's Address.

"Your primary duty," said His Lordship, in addressing the Grand Jury, "is to investigate cases of crime, you being here for that purpose. Of course you can also inspect such places as hospitals, the gaol, and any other places where persons are kept at the public expense. I regret very much that in this country at the present time, there is an epidemic of crime, of murders—wives and mothers being killed by their own kith and kin. It is a dismal state of affairs, but they must be investigated fearlessly." His Lordship then explained that one case had been suspended, namely, that of Deline. He then went on to summarize the particulars of the Gorham case. A young man, he said, was charged with murdering his mother. He then reviewed the facts, stating that the prisoner was apparently responsible for his action. He did not intend to shoot his mother, but if a man shoots with the intention of killing one man and kills another, the law says, he is guilty of murder. "It is probably a case for executive clemency." His Lordship added, "on the part of the Crown, but that is not for us. We must go by the letter of the law. The mercy of the Crown in this country has been extended somewhat too liberally." This concluded the address and the jury retired.

The civil case of Foley vs. West was then proceeded with.

CONFECTIONERS COMPLAIN TO COUNCIL OF OIL ON STREETS

Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon Write on Their Behalf...Say the Oil is Hurting Their Wares and Injuring Trade

The George street confectioners as stated in the Examiner some weeks ago, have been complaining against the use of oil on George street and their protest has taken a tangible form in the shape of the following letter in their behalf from Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon, which was read at last night's meeting:

"We have been instructed by Messrs. Potvin, Coleman Bros., and Hooper, bakers and confectioners carrying on business on George street that the city's practice of sprinkling the street with oil is occasioning serious injury to their trade and that a large number of their customers are leaving them, owing to the odour and taste of oil pervading the articles manufactured by them, as a result of the presence of oil on the street. Our clients now insist that this practice either be discontinued forthwith or that such other material be used upon the streets as will be free from the objectionable features now prevailing. We would be pleased if you would be good enough to advise us what action the Council intends to take in the matter. Board of Works.

MR. JAMES STEVENSON EX-M.P. PASSES AWAY

Hand of Death Cut Off a Career of Unparalleled Municipal Activity---A Resident of Peterborough Since 1843 Who Has Served the Public Faithfully and Well in Many Capacities.

Mr. James Stevenson, ex-M.P. and ex-Mayor of Peterborough for several terms in each case and the oldest citizen of Peterborough, died at his residence, 453 Water street, this morning at 7 o'clock. Mr. Stevenson's demise was not unexpected, the nature of his disease and his advanced years, making such an event probable. For some time past Mr. Stevenson has been in ill health suffering from valvular disease of the heart. The death of no citizen, past or recent of the county has appealed to so many recollections and regrets as has that of Mr. Stevenson. He was the oldest resident of the county and city, having been actively and intimately associated in business, official and other capacities, with the history, growth and development of the town and county for the space of nearly three score and ten years. He was known longer and to more persons both personally and by reputation than any resident of his years. Mr. Stevenson was in his 85th year at the time of his demise. He was born in the County Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1826, and came to Port Hope in 1840 with the family of his father, the late William Stevenson, who died a few years ago in Peterborough in the 97th year of his age. Mr. Stevenson came to Peterborough in 1843 at the age of sixteen years, and has therefore been a continuous resident of the town and city for sixty-seven years—seven years before, and ever since, its incorporation as a town.

Mr. Stevenson's business, municipal and political career are well known, and present no special features except industry and enterprise and fidelity to his trust as a representative in municipal, educational and parliamentary capacities. But in his personal characteristics and personal habits his history is unique. For nearly a very brief period before his death, he had never been a day in bed from illness and never required the services of a physician. He rose habitually at from 4 to 4.30 in the morning in summer and at six in the winter. He had never used either whisky or tobacco.

He has lived a strenuously active life in business from the age of 16 years till about sixteen years ago when business reverses and complications swept away the considerable fortune he had amassed. Yet with all his business affiliations he found time to give faithful and effective public service in all the varied capacities open to a public spirited citizen. He was a member of the Board of Education for fifty-six years consecutively, and many times chairman. In fact, it was only recently that age suggested his retirement, and upon the occasion his fellow members, in recognition of his long and faithful services, presented him with a portrait of himself. Mr. Stevenson was up to the time of his death a director of the Little Lake Cemetery Company, and had been from the time of its organization in 1851; was to the time of his death a member of the Board of Commissioners of the Town Trust, and was chairman from 1875 to 1899. He was Mayor of the town for ten terms—the first in 1856 and the last in 1891. During his term as Mayor, and largely through his energetic efforts, the Canadian General Electric Works were established in Peterborough. Seventeen years a member of the Town Council, and four years of the County Council; was for years a member of the Board of Directors of the Horticultural Society and a Justice of the Peace time out of mind.

In politics, Mr. Stevenson was a Conservative and an ardent follower and personal friend of the late Sir John Macdonald, who was on several

GODERICH MURDER INQUEST RESUMED THIS MORNING EXCITEMENT IS INTENSE

Special to The Examiner.

GODERICH, ONT., OCT. 25.—Thousands besieged the court room, built to accommodate a hundred or so, when the inquest following the brutal murder of Lizzie Anderson was resumed this morning. While the authorities are confident of developments nothing has been given out that shows any clue to the murderer of the girl, whose battered body was found in the distressed. The trend of questions was the first witness called and examined by G. T. Blackstock, K.C., representing the crown. She was very much distressed. The trend of questions was to the effect that she did not know accurately the movements of her sons the night of the murder.

GODERICH, OCT. 25.—Mrs. Jardine, mother of Ed. Jardine, was subjected to a gruelling cross-examination by Mr. Blackstock, in connection with her knowledge of her boy's (Edward S.) whereabouts on the night of Lizzie Anderson's murder. She made several contradictory statements.

THREE YOUNG MEN WHO ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR MUCH OF THE CLEVER ADVERTISING IN LOCAL PAPERS

People of Peterborough are no doubt aware of the fact that the advertising of many of the local stores compares favourably with the newspaper display of the business places of much larger cities, in point of attractiveness and enterprise. To this proficiency in advertising is attributed to a great extent the successful career of the local stores. The advertising is placed before the public in a capable, clever fashion, that is followed by immediate result.

Below, the Examiner publishes to-day photographs of three clever local advertisers, whose finished work is constantly before the public, and whose efforts on behalf of their respective firms have been crowned with success. These young men have acquired the faculty of putting the merits of the articles handled by their stores before the buying public in an irresistible manner.

The Valise Disappeared During Absence Of Owners

Two Hollanders, Peter Vonderveyght and Martin Smackman, who have been employed at a lumber camp north of Apsley are mourning the loss of a large leather valise containing nearly all their worldly goods. The two men were walking to Peterborough and had carried the heavy bag many miles. On Sunday night when they had arrived within a few miles of the city they decided to go to a farm house and obtain a drink of water. Leaving their valise at the side of the road they went away in search of refreshment and on their return found that their property had disappeared. It is thought that some one driving past saw the valise and picked it up. At all events it was gone and the two men had to come on to Peterborough without their surplus wardrobe. They are at present situated at 118 James street in this city and would like to have some information about their property.

Want Cement Walk Built Across Central Park

The people who cross Central Park are wondering why the Council does not accede to the wishes of the people and the request of the School Board, and put a wide granolithic walk across the park. In view of the fact that sidewalks have been built in the suburbs, where there is very little traffic, it is hard to understand the continued denial of the request of the School Board and others for this walk. The present path is lower than the surrounding ground, and in wet weather, especially in the Spring, the walk is simply impassable. The result is that people try to get a footing on the grass, and that is destroyed. To-day the park is covered up with trails leading in all directions.

MR. AYLESWORTH.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, received no more than justice in the splendid reception tendered him by his constituents, irrespective of party leaning, of North York on Saturday, to celebrate the successful outcome of the fisheries negotiations at the Hague, and to recognize Mr. Aylesworth's large share and effective service in conducing to the issue. His address on the occasion of the banquet in his honour, had the statesman-like ring to be expected of a public man of statesman calibre. Among the great men the fisheries negotiations gathered at the Hague, he held his place with dignity and distinction, a credit not only to the country he directly represented, but to the imperial interests he also helped represent. Mr. Aylesworth is a big man in every sense—in intellectual equipment, intellectual culture, outlook and patriotism. He has strong convictions, based on sound reasoning, and held conscientiously in spite of what others may think on the same subjects. His legal and jurisprudential knowledge and training have been placed at the service of his country with splendid effect in national and international crises, in which knowledge from skilled and patient research, and earnest loyalty were factors in success. In the official place, he so efficiently occupies his services have been marked by capable and bold administration. He is one of the big men of our time, and in his public, national, international, and personal relations confers dignity upon public life and service.

CANADA'S GREAT TRADE YEAR.

The fiscal year 1910, which ended on March 31st last, established a new record in Canada's foreign trade. This is the cheering story told by the report just issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce. The total export and import figures for 1910 are $683,211,221, an increase of $122,000,000 over the fiscal year 1909.

The exports of home produce in 1910 amounted to $279,947,551, classified as follows:

The mine	$ 40,087,017
The fisheries	15,683,162
The forest	47,517,033
Animals and their produce	53,926,515
Agricultural products	90,433,747
Manufactures	31,494,910
Miscellaneous	129,161
	$279,947,551

The United Kingdom still leads as a purchaser of Canadian goods, the exports to Great Britain for 1910 totalling $140,694,109, a record figure. Exports of home products to the United States, the next greatest buyer for 1910, amounted to $104,199,678, an increase of nineteen millions over the figures for 1909. The figures of the exports by countries taking considerable quantities of goods in 1909-10 are as follows:

Great Britain	$140,634,107
United States	104,150,778
West Indies	5,948,245
South America	4,744,924
Newfoundland	3,970,952
Australia	3,583,447
Belgium	2,900,092
France	2,640,648
Germany	2,501,191
Holland	1,937,852
China and Japan	1,910,724
Italy	829,508

Imports from the United States increased from $182,609,988 to $233,071,155 in the year, but of this sum over one hundred millions came in under the free list, being mainly raw materials and articles not produced in this country. Imports from Great Britain totalled $95,666,004 in 1910, an increase of fifteen millions over the figures for 1909. Since the preferential tariff went into force in 1897 imports from the United Kingdom have grown to $29,228,576. By countries the imports for 1910 were:

United States	$233,071,155
Great Britain	95,060,004
France	10,100,544
Germany	7,935,230
West Indies	7,336,056

Merchandise imported from other countries approximated nineteen millions in value.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Montreal Star, the only original and ironclad champion of protection, is taking on a slight cant. It says: "While we are protectionists we do not mind a little reciprocity."

The Liberal-Conservatives, remarks the Globe, do not seem to mind being numbered among the "Progressives," but the good old-fashioned Tories will have none of it. You cannot make a tortoise into a hare by changing his name.

The Lake Superior Corporation, with headquarters at the Soo, is using $4,000,000 British capital to push the Algoma Central to Hudson Bay. This is in addition to six million dollars spent in new local enterprises in the last two years.

The Mail and Empire says that the banquet of Saturday to Hon. Mr. Aylesworth is a sign of his retirement from public life. The wish is father to the thought. The organ has thus removed almost every member of the cabinet and almost every prominent Liberal from office or public life.

The bye-election in Drummond and Athabaska should enlist the interest of every true Canadian and friend of British connection and Imperial solidarity. It is a contest between the representatives of a united Canada and Imperial cohesion and the forces of Canadian disintegration, belittlement, and the champion of parochialism.

CENSUS TAKING IN CANADA.

(Ottawa Journal)

The Canadian census now in preparation will be the fifth to be taken. The twelfth census of England, the eleventh census of the United Kingdom, and the fifth census of Canada will be taken next year. It was originally intended in England to have the census taken in the year 1800, but the House of Lords, believing a census might teach the middle and lower classes their great numerical political strength, opposed the project and succeeded in blocking it for a year. Thus the first census was taken in 1801 instead of 1800. Canada, after Confederation, doubtless chose 1871, instead of 1870, for her first census, in order to be harmony with Great Britain.

The Canadian census of 1871 was an extremely elaborate affair, and its results were embodied in many large volumes. Later, some unnecessary statistics were dropped from the table of inquiry, although of late years the tendency has been to go back to the earlier elaboration of inquiry.

It was suggested last session that considerable more information in relation to capital, its origin, distribution and returns could be collected and compiled by the Government. Indeed, the financial and industrial end of the Canadian census is its weakest division. Much of the general financial statements used in Parliament by speakers and others have to be collected by the individual parliamentarians, who require in their argument, whereas much of it, by the addition of a very few questions, could be collected at the same time, at the ordinary information as to population, etc.

The census is in the nature of an annual stock taking. Canada desires it to be wide in scope and exact in detail. The census of 1901 can be improved materially both as regards collection and information, in the census of 1911. The various criticisms of parliament in this regard, criticisms as a rule fair and unmarred by partisan consideration, should be taken advantage of by the Government in planning the approaching collection of information of vital use to Canada.

THE NIGHT RING.

The following closing sentences from Hon. A. B. Aylesworth's speech at Newmarket on Saturday have a good and true ring:

"O, let there be no thought — I know there is none in the old country—let there be no thought throughout the length and breadth of this land of ours of separation from the old flag and the old land. One hundred and thirty years ago this Province of Ontario had the nucleus of its population in the men who deserted everything for the sake of the British flag; who left behind their property, their friends, their homes, their brothers, in some instances even their fathers and their sons, and at all costs came here into the wilderness of Upper Canada to make a home for themselves and for their people after them, and through whose privations we now enjoy the blessed country in which we live. Just as through evil days, storm and stress, those people stood firm to British institutions and to British loyalty, so we, their sons, stand to-day, and so, let me pursuade myself, long after we here, are gathered to our final rest, those who come into this country after us will stand true to Great Britain and to British institutions until time itself shall have its end."

How Des Moines Does Under Government By Commission

(M. O. Hammond in The Globe.)

DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 7.—At noon to-day twenty-eight of the leading business men of Des Moines sat down to a luncheon, and while they ate, and subsequently they debated what they could do to keep from suspension a packing plant now in bankruptcy through lack of working capital or inefficient management, or both.

It was argued that here was an industry which expends $50,000,000 a year in Des Moines and vicinity for wages and hogs; it was worth trying to save it, and save it they no doubt will. This incident in itself is of no general interest, but it is mentioned as evidence of the Des Moines way. The meeting was of the Greater Des Moines committee, a voluntary band of thirty citizens, who actually meet twice every week to talk over means of helping Des Moines.

They not only meet, but they contribute about $50,000 a year for the good of city projects, and take the lead in other movements, such as a new Y.M.C.A., a coliseum, a beautiful bridge over the river and the like.

What Started It.

It is all an outgrowth of the Des Moines plan of city government, an experiment, now happily a success, which has been copied with various modifications in nearly four score other American towns and cities.

Des Moines founded her plan on that of Galveston, which unfortunate city recast her system of government after the Gulf of Mexico rolled in one night and swept away about everything but the site.

Galveston was so clean after the tidal wave she wanted to wash away her sins of municipal misgovernment, and Des Moines, tired of her experience in neglect and inefficiency and waste through aldermanic rule and bossism, turned to the commission system, with the further innovation of provision for the initiative referendum.

A Fever of Unrest.

This Republic of the United States, created nearly a century and a half ago on the belief that it represented the only true principles of democracy, has learned much in recent years, and in this year of grace, 1910, is less confident of her perfection as a democratic commonwealth than perhaps ever before.

The nation is in a fever of unrest because of the widespread conviction that wealth has secured undue privileges over the masses, and a political evolution is threatened, or now actually in process. Now, in the lesser spheres of civic government the old system of electing mayor and aldermen, who shall perform the dignified duties of legislation and appoint subordinates to look after administration, is breaking down to be replaced by commissioners who will be the administrators themselves and shall personally be responsible for their respective departments.

No Party Politics.

In the Des Moines plan, now in its third year of operation, ward lines are abolished and party politics have no place. The mayor is elected as such, ment of Public Affairs; one commission have their departments assigned to them after the election. The mayor is Superintendent of the Department of Public Affairs; one commissioner supervises the parks and public improvements, the third public safety, and the fourth accounts and finances.

The commissioners are thus in greater degree admini-trative officers than under any previous system, and as everything is done in open light their acts are subject to inspection and criticism from day to day.

It were as if Controller Foster in Toronto was also chief of the fire and police departments, Controller Spence of the treasury department, and so on. Formerly the councillors in Des Moines were paid $250 each per year, and left the work to others to perfor; now they are paid $3,500 each, with the mayor $3,500, and they do the work, they know it is done, and the people know where to lay the blame if it is not done right. They are elected for two years, and at the last election two of the four commissioners were defeated.

Has Borne Good Fruit.

Of course, the change in system was not made without difficulty. The "Old Guard," as the reactionary ranks are called in this country, opposed it with vigour and misrepresentation. But the plan has been a success, otherwise it would not be copied so widely.

One sees its fruits in new bridges over the Des Moines River, in the beautiful system of street lighting, in the clean streets, and in the handsome new city hall now being erected. More than ever, the civic spirit that has been aroused shows itself in such an organization as the Greater Des Moines committee is evidence of what Des Moines people say is a new era. There is yet much to do, for there are smoke and billboard nuisances and unkempt lawns and vacant lots which it will test the courage of the commissioners to remedy.

Efficiency and Simplicity.

"Des Moines would not go back to the old system for anything," said Col. Lafayette Young, editor of The Capital, who said he had had no part in originating the idea, but had taken it up enthusiastically.

Mayor James R. Hanna said that experience had shown that the system led to greater efficiency and simplicity in the city government. The city got 100 cents for every dollar spent, whereas they used to get only about 60 cents, owing to incompetence and waste, if not actual dishonesty.

"The old form of city government," said Mayor Hanna, "was founded on the theory that the councillors' duty was mainly to pass legislation. The new theory is that it is largely administrative, just as you would run a railroad or any other large enterprise."

THE NEW DOMESDAY BOOK.

(London Advertiser)

The compilation of the new British Domesday Book proceeds apace. As it will register the first complete valuation of property in the United Kingdom since the days of William the Third, the landowning interests are in a ferment. The small owners have made little trouble, for already 3,000,000 copies, properly filled out, each one representing a parcel of property, have ben returned to the inland revenue board. The great landowners, however, are filling the air with lamentations, and asking the landless millions to weep with them over the crushing task of valuing their own acres. Of course, all the flunkies have responded, and even some of the Canadian Yellow-plushes are happy in the opportunity of mingling their tears with those of the "toffs."

The Domesday Book will emphasize the fact that much of the land has been shamefully undervalued for the purposes of taxation, and that most of it is in a few hands. In 1883 owners in England and Wales numbered nearly a million, but the ownership of the majority of the million was a very small thing, as the following analysis showed:

38,214 people owned 27,473,848 acres; average 719 acres each.

934,797 people owned 5,526,502 acres, average 6 acres each.

Again, of the 934,797 small owners:

In 1883 in the whole United Kingdom 77,000,000 acres of land were privately owned, of which 2,500 persons held 40,426,000 acres.

The new Domesday Book promises to be a great social document, and the facts adduced will make it an effective political weapon in the hands of the progressive party now in power.

JUNIOR RACE

I am an amateur in good standing and am under eighteen years of age. I wish to be entered in the Examiner Junior Road Race on Thanksgiving Day.

Name_____

Address_____

Contestants are required to fill out the blanks in connection with whichever race they desire to enter and send in this coupon to the sporting editor of the Peterboro Examiner as soon as possible.

Last Year's Junior Winner Has Entered Again

Willie Edwards, of Keene, winner of last year's junior race in the record time of 28 mins., 30 secs., to-day sent in his entry for this year's junior event, brining the junior entry list up to 32. Edwards won the event handily last year, making a new record and will certainly have to be looked after next Monday. His entry means that both senior and junior winners of last year are trying to repeat, as Smoke of Chemong is already in the running in the senior.

Max Rogers of Byersville is another junior entry whose name came along this morning. There will undoubtedly be a record crowd of junior starters. The entries for the junior close at noon on Friday, so that the youngsters have only three days more to qualify.

Y. M. C. A's Kind Offer To Road Race Contestants

Through the kindness of the Y.M.C.A. the members of the Examiner's Thanksgiving Day road races will have more privileges than have usually been accorded them. The Y.M.C.A. has most kindly placed at the disposal of the contestants, both senior and junior, the locker room and baths, so that the members may dress in the Y.M.C.A. building and take a bath there after the races are run. The busses will leave the Y.M.C.A. instead of the Examiner office.

The Examiner is most grateful to the Y.M.C.A. for their most hospitable offer, and the contestants will no doubt equally appreciate their kindness.

Important Improvement At Juniper Island, Stony Lake

Government Wharf is Being Extended 25 Feet and the Pavilion Will Be Enlarged to the Water's Edge.

A BIG CHANGE

The Dominion Government has a gang of men at present employed in adding an extension of 60 feet to Juniper Island wharf, Stony Lake. The extension is to be covered by a canopy, so that the public will have the benefit of shelter from sun and shower while using the wharf for embarking upon, or landing from, steamers and other craft. Incidentally, it will be a pleasant place of resort, too, on a hot summer day. The extended wharf will insure ample accommodation to the increasing population of the lakes.

The Cottagers' Association have made arrangements to do their share in completing the equipment of the island in making its advantages of the greatest service to the public. The already spacious pavilion is having twenty-five feet added to its length. This extension will bring the pavilion down to the water's edge, and will provide the additional space—the need of which has been greatly felt for church services on Sundays, and for concerts and other social gatherings during the week. The accommodation of the pavilion will be further enlarged by the addition of a balcony or platform, on the sides, provided with seats for the use of spectators, so that the floor space will not be occupied to so great an extent by lookers-on.

Since the closing of the season Mr. Stock has erected a large compartment boat house, with dormitory accommodation above, consisting of separate rooms.

Altogether the improvements, made and in progress, will tend to add to the public convenience and comfort and to popularize the lakes as a delightful summer resort.

POLICE COURT

A young man from Otonabee blew into the city on Saturday night, and for some reason used some pretty tall talk on the street. The local police officers evidently objected to profane language being used, when applied to them, so they arrested the offender. Before this was accomplished, however, there was a race between brute strength and human power, as the young man was driving and made a wild dash for the country. The officers gave chase on their bicycles and succeeded in "heading him off." He accordingly was arraigned before Magistrate Dumble in the police court this morning and paid a fine of $2.00 and cost, $4.60 in all.

An Englishman, out from the old country about four months, was employed with a farmer near the city at the rate of $4.00 per week. It seems that two weeks ago the farmer gave him $5.00 on Wednesday, which was pay day, and only gave him $3 the following week. The Englishman alleges that on the Wednesday he received $6.00 his employer told him that his wages were raised. When he only received $3 the following week, however, there was a dispute and the Englishman had it settled in court. Neither employer or employed had any proof for this statement, however, so $2.00 was allowed to the Englishman.

The first part of the evening was devoted to progressive euchre, and after refreshments were served by the young men, dancing was indulged in, in the gymnasium. Music was provided by the Misses Doris. The prize in the euchre contest were won Mrs. R. J. Begley, and the gentleman's prize was carried off by Mr. Cyril Giroux. The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Messrs. James Doris, A. Quinlan, G. McFadden, F. McGrath, F. Pope and James O'Brien.

Search Parties Leave; Balloonists May Be Dead

Examiner Special.

TORONTO, ONT., OCT. 25—Search parties have left several points in the northern wilds to look for missing balloonists, Hawley and Post of the America. Twi officers of the Aero Club are here and with the assistance of government officials have started out in Algoma, Temiskaming and the districts bordering on Quebec. Several telegrams arriving here tell of balloons seen at points miles and miles apart, but all are conflicting. It is realized as quite possible now, that the missing men have met a terrible death in the northern wilds.

COBALT, OCT. 25—Four hunters, who arrived here to-day from Lake Temiscaming district, express the belief that the balloon they saw Wednesday last was the America II. It was going north east and continued on its course.

Two Conventions Are Needed For Sunday School Work

Special to The Examiner.

OSHAWA, OCT. 25.—"We must have two conventions in Ontario now, one in the east and one in the west, said William McCrae, of Guelph, the president of the Ontario Sunday School Association, which opened its convention here to-day. Mr. McCrae said the work developed was very large now and distances too great to expect one convention to do the whole province. Delegates are on hand from all cities of Ontario.

"The Midnight Sons" Characterized As Biggest Musical Play On The Road

Characterized as the biggest musical play ever produced, "The Midnight Sons" with its cast of 100 people and wonderfully realistic theatre scene, comes to the Grand theatre next Thursday, Oct. 27, which will mark one of the few appearances of this play outside of the largest cities such as Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis.

To call "The Midnight Sons" a musical comedy gives no idea as to the character of the performance. It is more a spectacular production than a musical play. There are two acts and eight scenes, the scenes being as follows:

Act I.

Scene I.—The Farewell Banquet to Senator Noyes in the Sportsmen's Room of the Hotel Insomnia.

Scene II.—Interior of the Richard Noyes Shoe Store on Fifth Avenue, one year and a half later.

Scene III. Interior of same.

Scene IV. Concourse at the Grand Central Station.

Scene V. The Honeymoon Express.

Act II.

Scene I. Interior of the Merri Murray Theatre. Same afternoon.

Scene II. Exterior of the Merri Murray Theatre.

Scene III. Garden Fete at the Pouncequonham Hotel, Billionaire Beach, Fla. Two months later.

The most remarkable of these pictures above is that showing a Pullman train in motion with a bridal party on the rear platform, and the interior of an opera house with perfectly arranged orchestra seats, and sloping aisles, tiers of boxes, balcony and gallery, with every incidental thing which goes to add to the picturesqueness, safety and comfort of a theatre, such as ushers, water boys, program girls, candy boxes on the back of the seats, carpets on the aisles, cushioned-back orchestra chairs, calcium lights, spot lights, red lights to mark the exit doors, etc. This scene lasts about 35 minutes and is the most genuinely funny in the play, with the possible exception of the remarkable shoe store scene, in which two grotesque sook ladies ask to have their feet fitted by two dapper young clerks.

occasions Mr. Stevenson's guest at his residence on Simcoe Street, at which also gathered in times of election contests the visiting members of the Government Mr. Stevenson so staunchly supported. Mr. Stevenson represented West Peterborough in Parliament for two consecutive terms—from 1887 to 1896. His opponent at his first election was Mr. George A., now Hon. Senator Cox, and though they were the warmest personal friends, business associates to some extent, and members of the same church, the political battle was most vigorously waged on both sides, and at the end of a most strenuous contest Mr. Stevenson was successful by the narrow majority of 16. His opponent in the second contest was Mr. Richard Hall. In Parliament Mr. Stevenson worked loyally and faithfully for the interests of his county and constituency; and it was said that few private members had the ear of the Cabinet of the day to the extent that Mr. Stevenson had.

Mr. Stevenson's devotion to politics was given at the expense of his personal interests; the time and attention diverted from his business affairs resulted in business reverses, previous to which he had been possibly one of the largest individual property owners in Peterborough.

In religious affiliation, Mr. Stevenson, though originally a member of the Church of England, was a member, office-bearer, and faithful attendant and supporter of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church. Mr. Stevenson was twice married; his first wife being Margaret Brunker Dundas, and his second, Emma Rankin Appleton. Surviving her and Mr. Stevenson are two sons and four daughters.

The funeral will take place at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday, Oct. 27th, to the Little Lake cemetery.

FAKE HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Do Hair No Good, But Often Cause It to Fall Out.

Many hair preparations are "fake" because they are merely scalp irritants. They often cause a dryness, making the hair brittle, and, finally, lifeless. Dandruff is the cause of all trouble with hair. It is a germ disease. The germ makes cuticle scales as it digs to the root of the hair, where it destroys the hair's vitality, causing it to fall out. To cure dandruff, the germ must be killed. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Newbro's Herpicide is the only hair preparation that kills the dandruff germ, thereby leaving the hair to grow luxuriantly. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

For sale by McDermid and Jury, druggists; also Payne's drug store. $1 bottles guaranteed.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

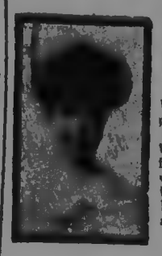
By Ruth Cameron

TO-DAY'S letter is especially addressed to "shy people."

Yesterday I gave some of the wise and helpful suggestions for overcoming shyness, which my readers sent me in response to a letter, which I had published, from a shy girl who wanted to be told how to overcome her weakness.

Their wisdom and helpfulness overflowed in a single day's space, so I quote some more to-day.

"I read your article in the paper last evening, relative to a letter a poor shy girl had written you," writes one of my correspondents, "and could not help thinking how well it suited my own case several years ago. I used to envy the girls who chatted away so freely and unconsciously in company, while I hardly dared to open my mouth. I remained like this until one day I came across an article which I though surely had been written for me. It simply said that if a girl found herself shy and backward in company, the way to overcome it was to go right ahead and speak out, force herself, at any cost, to say something and try to be sociable. I thought I would try just for an experiment and found it very hard at first. It seemed as though another person, not myself, were speaking. I kept up the battle quite bravely though until, to my surprise, I found it became quite the natural thing, and words and jokes came without an effort."



"A few years ago I was distressingly shy and self-conscious," writes another conqueror. "After considerable thought about the matter I concluded that I would consider that everyone I met was lonesome and needed entertaining, and I solved the problem. I attended the theatre and lectures as often as possible, and also read and digested the news of the daily papers—I mean things worth knowing and talking about—and in this way I had a number of subjects at my command which I could intelligently talk about."

Here is a letter that has so very much good sense that I must quote it bodily:

"Dear Shy Girl:—

"I was—and I am not. I love you already and I'd dearly like to help you, so I'm going to tell you just what made the difference in me.

"In the first place get away from home—not to stay, you know—just for a visit. The sense of what people expect us to be literally paralyzes our efforts to appear anybody else. So get away where nobody has any preconceived opinions about you.

"Then do as Miss Cameron says, put on your prettiest dress, spend an hour over your hair if necessary and start out for conquest—not of other people, but of yourself. Pick out the least formidable person in the room to practise on—a young girl, perhaps shy like yourself, or a middle-aged, lonely old maid. Then talk. Try to interest her. You'll find it amazingly easy since she isn't used to attention. Get her talking if you can. That's a more valuable talent still.

"Don't neglect anybody—the postman who brings your mail, the girl behind the counter, the garrulous old lady on the train—have a word and a smile and a bit of sympathy for them all. And before you know it, by not waiting for the 'worth while people' to begin on you'll be able to talk, to listen, to get something from, and to give something to, almost everybody. And, what will surprise you most—you'll be amazingly popular."

In behalf of the shy girl and all her sisters, thank you. Seems to me she hasn't any excuse for suffering from that trouble any longer.

ALL SAINTS FOWL SUPPER WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Large Attendance, Bountiful Repast and Enjoyable Programme Marked the Annual Event Last Evening.

THE PROGRAMME

The basement of All Saints old church building was crowded last night from 5.30 until eight o'clock, when a supper truly sumptuous in every detail was served. The evening's proceedings were under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary, of All Saints' church, and they deserve much credit for the splendid repast they provided. They are also to be congratulated upon the success of their efforts. The drizzling rain which was falling did not mar the pleasures of the evening or prevent a large crowd from attending, in fact, it was one of the largest crowds in the history of the church.

After supper was served a choice programme was heard, Rev. Mr. Trumpour acting as chairman. Mr. Trumpour made a short speech, in which he introduced the first number, which was a bas song, "The Village Blacksmith," by Mr. Stacey. The next item was a humorous song, which was very much appreciated, entitled, "Two Rooms to Let," by Mr. W. McLaren. The balance of the programme consisted of:

Song—Mr. B. Read.
Duet—"All's Well" by Messrs. Geo. Chandler and F. Stacey.
Song—Mrs. Perks.
Recitation—Mr. Woodworth.
Song—Mr. Geo. Chandler.
Song—Miss Ruth Dawson.
Song—Mr. McLaren.
Song—Mr. Bert Read.

During the interval, Mr. Lacheur, caretaker, was presented with a hymn book by Mr. Howden, on behalf of the congregation of All Saints' church. The address was read by Mr. James Edgar.

The presentation was followed by a sale of different articles made by the ladies, also several pies which were left over from the supper, the proceeds of the sale to go towards furnishing the new church. The auctioning of the articles caused a great deal of laughter, as some of the young men bought articles that they really had no use for. To say the least, the evening was a most enjoyable one and the great efforts which must have been made by the ladies to have things as they were, were crowned with success.

Excellent Art Work Being Shown In Public Schools

On Monday afternoon the representatives of the Women's Art Association completed their tour of schools and presented the remainder of the W. A. A. prizes.

The ladies to whom fell the duty of the distribution of the prizes, wish to express their appreciation of the cordial reception given them by Principal and teachers in each school. They are assured that the interest taken by the association in the art work had already been of assistance to the work, and would be an incentive to still better efforts during the coming year. The degree of excellence shown in the present art work throughout the schools would be a matter of surprise to many who do not know the work that the pupils are doing under careful training in that direction.

The W. A. A. are continuing their offer of prizes for the coming year.

McLaughlin Car Company To Have An Agency Here

The McLaughlin-Buick Motor Car Company of Oshawa, have decided to open an agency for their cars in this city, and with this end in view have secured the new garage recently completed on Simcoe street. This will be remodelled at once in order to provide a show room and offices and next week a stock of the best cars manufactured by the company will be sent here. The company intends to locate an agency here permanently and Mr. Trevor Murton will be in charge as local manager. An expert machinist from the company's factory at Oshawa will be sent here, so that the customers of the company are always sure of the services of a capable and experienced man. The McLaughlin firm intend to keep a number of cars here for livery purposes. The car made by them is widely known for its many points of merit and the operations of the firm's local agency will undoubtedly be crowned with success.

The "Anti-Whistling" By-law Gets Two Months Hoist

A by-law to "prevent noises calculated to disturb residents," in other words, the anti-locomotive whistle by-law was given a two months' hoist by the Council last night.

It was introduced, but met with strong opposition.

Ald. Bradburn thought it would be a mistake to pass the by-law.

Ald. Buller agreed with this opinion. He did not think the railways could get along without a certain amount of whistling.

Ald. Duncan on the other hand, thought the railways whistled in a ridiculous and unnecessary manner.

Ald. Duffus could see nothing to hurt anyone in the by-law.

However, on motion of Ald. Bradburn and Buller the matter was left over for two months.

In this connection the following letter was read last night from P. J. Lynch, Superintendent Northern Division G.T.R.:

This will acknowledge receipt of your favour of 4th inst. Have forwarded your communication to our master mechanic, Mr. Donnelly to request the engineers to reduce whistling in the city of Peterborough to a minimum. If you can give me a specific case of unnecessary whistling I will take up the matter with a view of preventing repitition.

A PLACE IN THE FAMILY

If you and your family were obliged to depend on one medicine, what would you choose? It is not difficult to guess what medicine Mrs. James Gray, Sartells, N.B., would choose, for she writes.—"For five years my husband and I have used Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for kidney troubles, biliousness and constipation and find them indispensable as a family medicine."

VOTE OF THANKS

At last night's meeting of the City Council a resolution, moved by Ald. Duncan, was passed, thanking the members of the old Public Library and Mechanics Institute Board for the faithful and efficient service they have rendered the city.

Mayor Morrow thought the Board was deserving of the sincere thanks of the city for their work.

BIG DOINGS IN THE BOYS' DEPARTMENT AT THE Y.M.C.A.

Century Hikers Club Have Their First Jaunt---Boy Scouts Meet on Friday and Will Have Outdoor Work Each Saturday---Mr. Tait Makes a Most Favourable Impression.

One of the liveliest and most enjoyable outings that has been conducted since the inauguration of the Boys' Department in the local Association, was pulled off on Saturday afternoon last, when over twenty of the members left the building at 1.15 p.m., for a seven-mile cross-country walk in their first tramp in connection with the newly-organized Century Hikers Club.

What the Club Is.

The Century Club is an outing club formed for the purpose of encouraging Saturday afternoon walks, the distance of each trip is credited to the boys till they have accomplished 100 miles, when this has been completed each member is entitled to a century Hikers Pin. This has become a very popular pastime amongst the Y. M. C. A. boys throughout Canada, and a large number of senior members are also taking it in.

Good Work Among the Boys.

Since Mr. Tait, the new Boys' Secretary's arrival many new phases of the work have been introduced, and a splendid interest shown by the members. On Sunday morning, Oct. 16th, a school boy's early morning Bible class was organized, at which there were twelve boys in attendance, and last Sunday morning there was an increase in this number which manifests the good work that can be done. On Friday night next Mr. Galley will organize a Business Boys' Class. Mr. Galley is a popular young man around the Y.M.C.A. and undoubtedly will have a good turnout. Taking all things into consideration, the Y. M. C. A. of Peterborough is well on its way into the most successful season's work that has yet been accomplished.

Boy Scouts.

It was clearly demonstrated on Friday evening last, that the re-organizing of the Y.M.C.A. Scouts added to the many new clubs of the department, one that is up to date and one that appeals to every boy. Boys have many hobbies, but the scout movement has supplied them with one that is not only new, but to every boy that lives up to the scout laws, instructive in many ways, and will make a boy manly, active, and useful. The Eagle and Wolfe Patrols were formed, a short talk on scouting and a scout story was told by the Boys' Secretary, who will be in charge. It was decided to meet every Friday at 8.45, in the Boys' Club Room, where instructions on scouting will be given, examinations tried and general business transacted, every Saturday will see something doing in the scouting line, which will be very interesting and appeal to every boy.

Next Saturday, Indian and White Man, will be the feature event of the day. All members are invited to take part in these games, as this simply gives one of the activities of the department. Dont forget. The time, Friday next, at 8.45; the place, Y. M. C. A., the game, Scouting for Boys.

The report was adopted.

Fire, Water and Light.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee reported and recommended as follows:

1.—That the Chairman of this Committee be authorized to sell any of the battery supplies at the fire station that are not required and that would deteriorate. This recommendation is made in view of the fact that the current for the alarm system is now received from the Bell Telephone Co.

2.—That the Peterborough Light and Power Co. be instructed to move the light at the corner of Smith and Concession streets, to the south-west corner, and to place an incandescent light on Brock street, between George and Aylmer streets.

3.—That the order for lights on Maitland avenue and Pearl avenue be cancelled.

The clause in the Property Committee's report in regard to charging Mr. R. Sheehy $25 for rent for land owned by the city on the river, north at the C. P. R. bridge, was referred back to the committee, on motion of Ald. Buller, seconded by Ald. Duffus.

Ald. Buller explained that Mr. Sheehy had paid twenty-five dollars per year for the land, when he used it, and was willing to pay that amount again when the land was in use.

The following by-laws were passed:

By-law No. 1556, to authorize the conveyance of part of King street to the Peterborough Canoe Co.

By-law No. 1557, fixing the salary of the janitor of the city buildings.

By-law No. 1558, to provide for the borrowing of $12,000 to pay for the cost of the erection and equipping of the Isolation Hospital.

A Concrete Wall.

Mr. Morrison was heard in regard to having a concrete wall built on his property, along the Downie St. creek. He was willing to do the work if the city would provide the material. The Spring freshets greatly damaged his property and he could make no improvements there.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works, who were given power to act on the report of the City Engineer.

Prescribed and Sold Hundreds of Bottles

Dr. J. C. Convery, a Physician and Chemist of High Standing, Extols the Virtue of the Great Health Restorer.

"There is always a great and lasting satisfaction to be derived from administering a remedy and obtaining the result desired and expected. I have been engaged in the practice since I graduated, over 45 years ago, both in pharmacy and medicine, and I have sold and prescribed hundreds of bottles of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey in cases to maintain and build up a patient's bodily resistance and shorten the period of convalescence, and patients who complain of headache, biliousness, want of appetite, lack of vigour and ambition, and a general run down and exhausted feeling, have found nothing more beneficial than Duffy's Malt Whiskey. I am positive of its being pure and unadulterated.—Dr. J. C. Convery, 119 Sixth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

All druggists, grocers, liquor merchants, or direct, $1.25 a bottle. Write us if you are sick, it will cost you nothing to learn how to treat yourself. Medical booklet and testimonials free.

POST CARD COLUMN

Peterborough Oct. 24th, '10.

Dear Sir,—If the Edison car would make the Electric Works about three minutes earlier than it does on the first morning trip, it would relieve a lot of uneasiness on the part of some of the workmen who have to use it. It is necessary to reach the factory about 6 minutes to seven in order that the men who work in the last building can lift their checks before the board is taken in.

Yours truly,
NORTH END.

FINES WERE IMPOSED ON TWO JURORS

Came in a Few Minutes After One O'clock and His Lordship Fined Them $10 for Their Lateness

NAMES WERE CALLED

Two prominent citizens in the persons of Messrs. Thos. Barrie and F. O. Allison, who had been summoned to serve on the Grand Jury at the Fall Assizes to-day did not arrive in time and a fine of ten dollars was imposed on each of them. When Court Crier Wood called out their names there was no response. The names were called a third time and yet there was no answer. Chancellor Sir John Boyd then imposed the above fines, both gentlemen having arrived but a few seconds after the imposition had been recorded. This is the first time in some years that a juror has been fined for non-punctuality in attendance.

A PRESENTATION

Last evening a large number of the young people of St. Andrew's church gathered to say good-bye to Mr. Grant Potter, who was passing through Peterborough from Regina, Sask., where he had spent the past three months, to his new home in Montreal. Mr. Potter gave a very interesting account of his trip through the West, after which the Y.P.S.C.E. presented him with a pair of gold cuff links and a tie pin. He made a suitable reply, expressing his thanks and appreciation.

It is thought that Miss Leneve's delicate condition at present created considerable sympathy on the part of the judge and jury.

Pleaded Not Guilty.

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 25.—Pleading not guilty to the charge of being an accessory to the murder for which her friend and paramour, Dr. Hawley Crippen is condemned to hang Nov. 8th, Miss Ethel Clara Leneve made a pathetic figure as she stood frail, tearful and trembling before the stern Judge Lord Alverstone and the jury this morning. The jury was soon chosen. When Prosecutor Muir began his address it was just as relentless, scathing arraignment as in Crippen's case. "It is inconceivable," said Muir, "that this woman whom Crippen desired to live with should have no knowledge of the crime." Witnesses are generally same as in Crippen's case, Bruce Miller, the Chicago man accused by Crippen, has made statement concerning his relations with Mrs. Crippen.

TO AGREE ON PRICE

The Manufacturers' committee of the City Council is holding a meeting with the representatives of the Canadian Chicle Company this afternoon for the purpose of agreeing upon the price which the company is to pay the city for a building site for a new factory at the corner of Ronaine and Aylmer streets. The matter will likely be taken up at a special meeting of the Council.

WANT A BRANCH

The Collier Electric Company has received a proposition from North Tonawanda, suggesting the location of a branch of the company at that place. It is a tribute to the fame of the flourishing local concern that they should be sought after to locate accross the line.

SANITARY INSPECTOR

At last night's meeting of the City Council a letter was read from the Medical Health Officer Dr. MacPherson, calling attention to the necessity for a better inspection of the dairies, etc., and suggesting the appointment of a sanitary inspector for the city. He pointed out that the work of inspecting could not be performed in a satisfactory manner if this was not done.

WEDDING BELLS

ECKWORTH—LUMSDEN.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Charlotte Street church this morning at 11 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Henderson, when Miss E. Lumsden, daughter of Mr. F. C. Lumsden, 312 Boswell avenue, was united in marriage to Mr. F. C. Eckworth, of Schenectady, N.Y. The young couple were unattended. They left on the 11.45 C. P. R. train for their future home, 813 Lincoln avenue, Schenectady, N.Y.

McDONALD—KOSTER.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at 8 o'clock this morning at the residence of the bride's parents, 341 Rubidge street, when Miss May L. Koster was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. Frank McDonald of Oshawa, by Rev. Father McColl. The bridesmaid was Miss Nora McDonald, sister of the groom, while Mr. Edward McDonald assisted the groom.

The bride was attractively attired in an imported gown of French Valenciennes, covered with Irish crochet lace. She also wore a large black picture hat with white plumes. The bridesmaid was prettily attired in a dress of pale blue silk, trimmed with satin ribbon. She looked very becoming in a French hat.

The young couple entered the drawing room to the strain of the wedding march, which was played by Miss Marion Gorman. The bride's only ornament was a necklace of pearls. After the ceremony about thirty guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast. The table was elaborately decorated with roses and chrysanthemums.

The happy young couple were made the recipients of many handsome and costly presents, showing the high esteem in which they were held by their friends.

Mr. and Mrs. McDonald left on the 11.45 G.T.R. train for Oshawa, where they will reside in future and carried with them the best wishes and heartiest congratulations of a large circle of friends.

EDWARD JARDINE SAYS WITNESSES AT GODERICH ARE LYING

Mrs Jardine Pleads Illness but G. T. Blackstock Sends Policeman After her—Crown Lawyer Uses Story of Albert Jardine as Dramatic Climax.

NOTHER ON STAND

Goderich, Oct. 26.—Replete with dramatic intensity were yesterday's sessions of the inquest into the murder of young Lizzie Anderson, whose nude body, with throat cut, was found in the cellar of an empty house here several days after she had been missing from home, and after having attended the local fall fair.

George Tate Blackstock, K.C., appeared as crown examiner, and he subjected Ed. Jardine, who has become a central figure in the case, and his mother to a most merciless examination.

Three dramatic climaxes, the like of which Canadian courts have seldom seen, resulted from his efforts to wring from Mrs. Jardine, Edward Jardine and Thomas Jardine truthful admissions of a nature that he would suggest. He reminded them all of the awful seriousness of an oath; inserted long, effective pauses, during which he pleaded with them to consider they had called upon their Maker to witness before they made final answer, and thundered at them that they were lying in the very face of the oath they had taken.

He shook their evidence adduced in former sittings, and forced them to flatly contradict one another, but he did not get an admission of any kind that bore directly on the commission of the crime.

Mrs. Jardine was on the witness stand for three hours and ten minutes, and Edward was subjected to a four hours' gruelling, from 3.30 p.m. till 7.30. Mr. Blackstock was first ruffled by the early announcement that Mrs. Jardine refused to present herself as a witness, pleading illness. This was too much in the face of her refusal to appear on the last day named for the enquiry, which was adjourned on her account, and a warrant was issued to secure her presence. He insisted that she be produced, and sent Chief Postlethwaite and a doctor up to the house to bring her down.

Then, as the nature of her answers and her contradictions rankled him, he scornfully arraigned her in these terms: "Anyone who has heard your evidence will believe—it is only fair to say—that you have not told the truth. The various stories you have told would shake even your own confidence in such evidence, would it not?"

"Yes," admitted the woman.

Another feature that goaded the crown inquisitor was the persistency of young Edward Jardine in calling witness after witness liars. Thirteen of them, old, young and medium, swore to seeing him on the fair grounds when he said he was at home, and Mr. Blackstock also read from the evidence of eight more witnesses along the same line, and these all, he said, were liars.

"Now, then, that's a pretty large band of liars, don't you think?" finally remarked counsel.

"I should think, yes," admitted Jardine.

"And you think that they are all coming here loaded up with lies against you?"

"Yes, they certainly are."

"Then, if we take a more charitable view of it, and if these people are telling the truth; they saw you with the Anderson girl long after you saw her with the stranger of the fedora hat, you speak of?"

"Yes, but they are not telling the truth."

Mr. Blackstock paused and stared for a minute dramatically into the prisoner's face. Slowly and distinctly he enunciated: "I am obliged to ask you one or two questions which I'd rather not ask, for the purpose of getting at you mind. Your brother John was in trouble some years ago?"

"I don't know."

"Did one of your brothers serve a term in the penitentiary for an assault on a little girl, four years old?"

"I think Albert did."

"No, not Albert—we are coming to that. Did you know that your brother Albert was convicted for an assault on a girl 14 years old?"

"Yes, he was sent down."

"And was he ordered to receive 12 stripes on his back."

"I don't know as to that."

"When did he get back?"

"Last spring."

"And did you know that it would fare badly with a man if he committed an assault on a young girl against her will?"

"Yes."

"Now, I am going to ask you presently—but not now—I'm going to ask you whether you knew of any person connected with the death of Lizzie Anderson. Now I don't want you to answer right away. I will tell you when to answer; but I want to warn you that, if you do know, and say you don't you will be in a pretty bad box when it comes to the time when you wish to say you do. I am going to give you a few minutes to consider, while the clock ticks; then I will tell you to answer. Consider well what that answer shall be, and what it means."

Jardine's color alternated between white and crimson. Tick, tock, tick, tock—there was not a soul among the 300 spectators that did but count the ticks for the space of a dozen breaths.

"Now, I ask you that question," said Mr. Blackstock.

"I don't know anything about it," Jardine replied huskily.

"Can you suggest any reason for these people lying about you?"

"Not unless they want to try and condemn some innocent person," was the calm reply.

"And you know, of course, the very great necessity of knowing who was the last person with this girl?"

"I'd tell if I knew, but I don't."

"That will do; you may go, but you must not leave the court room," said the coroner, and called for his brother Thomas.

The Jardines were the only witnesses excluded from the court room during the examination yesterday, and a watch was put on their house, when it was found that proceedings would have to be extended into another day.

New Station for Guelph.

Guelph, Oct. 26.—Mayor G. D. Hastings has received a telegram from Supt. Oborne of the C.P.R., telling him that the contract for the new station has been let to Contractors Wells and Gray and that work is to be commenced right away. The new station will be situated several hundred yards west of the present one, and will cost between $30,000 and $35,000.

NAPLES IS UNHAPPY

Cyclone, Volcano and Tidal Wave Play Upon City All at Once.

Naples, Oct. 26.—The beautiful coasts of the Bay of Naples and the Gulf of Salerno and the Islands of Ischia and Procida have been devastated by a peculiar combination of the elements.

The disaster appears to have come in the form of a cyclone having three centres, the first over the Island of Ischia, the second over the Town of Torre Del Greco, on the east coast of the Bay of Naples, and the third sweeping the Gulf of Salerno.

Accompanying the cyclone were a cloudburst, a tidal wave and violent eruptions of Mount Vesuvius, and from a crater suddenly opened on the summit of the long extinct Mount Enomea, on the Island of Ischia.

Admiral Leonardi, Minister of Marine, is at Ischia organizing the relief, for which $400,000 is already available.

The coasts of the mainland, which the day before were beautiful with their growth of orange, lemon and mandarin trees, have been overrun with rivers of mud and ashes from Mount Vesuvius. Human bodies and the carcasses of dumb animals have been discovered in the molten stream.

Later and more accurate reports reduce the estimate of fatalities to about 100. The greater number of deaths were at Cetara, on the north coast of the Gulf of Salerno.

Premier of France Has Bodyguard.

Paris, Oct. 26.—President Fallieres and the members of the Cabinet are being guarded constantly, as the result of the appearance of an anarchistic circular, condemning the Ministers to death, because of the conviction in the courts of militant members among the railway strikers.

When Parliament reassembled yesterday after the recess, the extreme Socialists in the chamber, who are determined to champion the cause of the railway strikers, made a violent demonstration against M. Lepine, prefect of police, who was present as a spectator.

Several interpellations on the subject of the recent strikes were made, some for and some against the right of the railroad men to unionize and strike, and another calling for the dissolution of the Federation of Labor, on the ground that it was revolutionary.

Would Swallow Holland.

London, Oct. 26.—Germany is gradually drawing Holland into her grip.

Holland, despairing of British protection, is considering what terms she can make with Germany.

This information is published by The Express, which says that the statement is made by a Dutch gentleman of the highest standing in Amsterdam.

"Annexation," he adds, "is a word which, if used, no doubt would breed patriots, but it would be called by another name. A great deal will be talked about preserving our integrity and also about obtaining protection of the great German Empire. It would be suggested that our trade would derive enormous advantages. All this would sound better, but the result would be the same."

Quebec Utters Protest.

Quebec, Oct. 26.—Over 5,000 persons assembled in the Parish Church of St. Roch's to protest against the recent utterances of Mayor Nathan of Rome, against his holiness the Pope. Dr. Delarge, M.P.P., president of the St. Jean the Baptiste Society, presided, having on his right Mgr. Begin, Hon. Mr. Caron, Senator Landry and Hon. T. Chapais, while on his left sat Mayor Drouin, Mgr. Brunault, Nicolet, Ald. Gosselin and Mr. Langlois, M.P.P., St. Sauveur. Sixty-eight French-Canadian societies that were represented at the meeting adopted resolutions condemning the attitude taken by Mayor Nathan.

Tried to Fire Residence.

Chatham, Oct. 26.—Word has reached here of a daring attempt to set fire to the residence of Henry Enos at North Buxton. Detecting smoke, Mrs. Enos made a search, finding overalls and other rubbish, thoroughly saturated with oil, beneath the bedroom floor. In the darkness she saw two unknown men running toward the railroad tracks. They are believed to have escaped on a passing freight.

Enos is a brother of Jake Enos, who was shot at Chatham last summer.

Electric Railway For the West.

Calgary, Oct. 26.—From Medicine Hat comes the report that the Alberta Electric Railway Co. is applying to the Dominion Government for a charter to install telephone and telegraph lines, to construct and operate light and power plants, to acquire and operate coal mines, and to construct and operate an electric railway to connect Medicine Hat, Calgary, Lethbridge, Banff and intermediate towns. The main line will run through the irrigation block part of the way.

Chief Used the Strap.

Cornwall, Oct. 26.—The Cornwall police station was the scene of a rather unique proceeding yesterday morning, when Chief of Police Smith, at the request of a local lady, soundly strapped her twelve-year-old son, who had become a confirmed truant. The penalty was given with all proper formalities, the culprit being held by another officer's knee, while he received strokes of a heavy strap, and was promised five extra for the next offence.

A Rosy Picture.

London, Oct. 26.—Sir G. Doughty received a great welcome at Grimsby. With a torchlight procession his supporters escorted him to a meeting attended by eight thousand people. Sir G. Doughty said that Canada was a country, without a workhouse, pauper, beggar or shoeless child wanting bread. The Dominion had progressed amazingly in the last seven years, and the tariff that had made Canada could make Britain.

Office Goes to Ottawa.

Kingston, Oct. 26. Lt.-Col. Hemming has been notified to remove the office and books of the late Major Bruce Carruthers, assistant adjutant general of signalling, to Ottawa, where the office will be located. The transfer will remove Sergt.-Major J. R. McCowan, chief signalling instructor. When Carruthers took charge in 1906, he did so on condition that the office would be in Kingston, his home city.

New German Cruiser Made 28 Knots.

Berlin, Oct. 26. The official tables of the trials of the new cruiser Von der Tann showed that the vessel made an average speed of 27.4 knots an hour in six runs. The highest speed attained at any time was 28 1-2 knots, the engines developing 80,000 horse-power. The runs were made in water about 215 feet deep, and it is calculated that the cruiser will do better over a depth of 350 feet and average 28 knots.

New York to Go Thirsty.

New York, Oct. 26. Election night will be "dry" after the regular closing hours. More than two hundred application for all-night licenses to hotels and restaurants were received by Mayor Gaynor yesterday, but he promptly announced that all such requests will be refused.

ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST

Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.

BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS

Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nineteenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

CHAPTER X.

AN EXPRESSION OF CONFIDENCE

I have no exact recollection of how long I spent in that little room. After a while I closed the door safe, and reset the combination lock with trembling fingers. Then I searched all round, but could find no traces of any recent intruder. I unbid the heavy shutters, and let in a stream of sunshine. Outside, Ray and Lady Angela were strolling up and down the terrace. I watched the latter with fascinated eyes. It was from her that this strange warning had come to me, this warning which as yet was only imperfectly explained. What did she know? Whom did she suspect? Was it possible, that she, a mere child, had even the glimmering of a suspicion as to the truth? My eyes followed her every movement. She walked with all the lightsome grace to which her young limbs and breeding entitled her, her head elegantly poised on her slender neck, her face mostly turned towards her companion, to whom she was talking earnestly. Even at this distance I seemed to catch the inspiring flash of her dark eyes, to follow the words which fell from her lips so gravely. And as I watched a new idea came to me. I turned slowly away and went in search of the Duke.

I found him sitting fully dressed in an anteroom leading from his bedroom, with a great pile of letters before him, and an empty postbag. He was leaning forward, his elbow upon the table, his head resting upon his right hand. Engrossed as I was with my own terrible discovery, I was yet powerfully impressed by his unfamiliar appearance. In the clear light which came flooding in through the north window he seemed to me older and his face more deeply lined than any of my previous impressions of him had suggested. His eyes were fixed upon the mass of correspondence before him, most of which was as yet unopened, and his expression was one of absolute aversion. At my entrance he looked up inquiringly.

"What do you want, Ducaine?" he asked.

"I am sorry to have disturbed your Grace," I answered. "I have come to place my resignation in your hands."

His face was expressive enough in its frowning contempt, but he said nothing for a moment, during which his eyes met mine mercilessly.

"So you find the work too hard, eh?" he asked.

"The work is just what I should have chosen, your Grace," I answered. "I like hard work, and I expected it. The trouble is that I have succeeded no better than Lord Ronald."

My words were evidently a shock to him. He half opened his lips, but closed them again. I saw the hand which he raised to his forehead shake.

"What do you mean, Ducaine? Speak out, man."

"The safe in the study has been opened during the night," I said. "Our map of the secret fortifications on the Surrey downs and plans for a camp at Guilford have been examined."

"How do you know this?"

"I tied the red tape round them in a peculiar way. It has been undone and retied. The papers have been put back in a different order."

The Duke was without doubt agitated. He rose from his chair and paced the room restlessly.

"You are sure of what you say, Ducaine?" he demanded, turning, and facing me suddenly.

"Absolutely sure, your Grace," I answered.

He turned away from me.

"In my own house, under my own roof," I heard him mutter. "Good God!"

I had scarcely believed him capable of so much feeling. When he resumed his seat and former attitude I could see that his face was almost gray.

"This is terrible news," he said. "I am not at all sure, though, Mr. Ducaine, that any blame can attach itself to you."

"Your Grace," I answered, "there were three men only who knew the secret of that combination. One is yourself, another Colonel Ray, the third myself. I set the lock last night. I opened it this morning. I ask you in the name of common sense, upon whom the blame is likely to fall? If I remain this will happen again. I cannot escape suspicion. It is not reasonable."

"The sword was a common one," the Duke said to himself. "Some one may have guessed it."

"Your Grace," I said, "is it likely that any one would admit the possibility of such a thing?"

"It may have been overheard."

"It has never been spoken," I reminded him. "It was written down, glanced at by all of us, and destroyed."

The Duke nodded.

"You are right," he admitted. "The inference is positive enough. The safe has been opened between the hours of ten at night and seven o'clock this morning by——"

"By either myself, Colonel Ray, or your Grace," I said.

"I am not sure that I am prepared to admit that," the Duke objected quietly.

"It is inevitable!" I declared.

"Only the very young use that word," the Duke said drily.

"I spoke only of what others must say," I answered.

"It is a cul de sac, I admit," the Duke said. "Nevertheless, Mr. Ducaine, I am not prepared without consideration to accept your resignation. I cannot see that our position would be improved in any way, and in my own mind I may add that I hold you absolved from suspicion."

I held myself a little more upright. The Duke spoke without enthusiasm, but with conviction.

"Your Grace is very kind," I answered gratefully, "but there are the others. They know nothing of me. It is inevitable that I should become an object of suspicion to them."

The Duke looked thoughtfully for several moments at the table before him. Then he looked up at me.

"Ducaine," he said, "I will tell you what I propose. You have done your duty in reporting this thing to me. Your duty ends there—mine begins. The responsibility, therefore, for our future course of action remains with me. You, I presume, are prepared to admit this."

Certainly, your Grace," I answered.

"I see no useful purpose to be gained," the Duke continued, "in spreading this thing about. I believe that we shall do better by keeping our own counsel. You and I can work secretly in the matter. I may have some suggestions to make when I have considered it more fully; but for the present I propose that we treat the matter as a hallucination of yours. We shall hear in due course if this stolen information goes across the water. If it does—well, we shall know how to act."

"You mean this?" I asked breathlessly. "Forgive me, your Grace, but it means so much to me. You believe that we are justified?"

"Why not?" the Duke asked coldly. "It is I who am your employer. It is I who am responsible to the country for these things. You are responsible only to me. I choose that you remain. I choose that you speak of this matter only when I bid you speak."

To me it was relief immeasurable. The Duke's manner was precise, even cold. Yet I felt that he believed in me. I scarcely doubted but that he had suspicions of his own. I, at any rate, was not involved in them. I could have wrung him by the hand, but for the inappropriateness of such a proceeding. So far as he was concerned I could see that the matter was already done with. His attention was beginning to wander to the mass of letters before him.

"Would you allow me to help your Grace with your correspondence?" I suggested. "I have no work at present."

The Duke shook his head impatiently.

"I thank you," he said. "My man of business will be here this morning, and he will attend to them. I will not detain you, Mr. Ducaine."

I turned to leave the room, but found myself face to face with a young man in the act of entering it.

"Blenavon!" the Duke exclaimed.

"How are you, sir?" the newcomer answered. "Sorry I didn't arrive in time to see you last night. We motored from King's Lynn, and the whole of this respectable household was in bed."

I knew at once who he was. The Duke looked towards me.

"Ducaine," he said, "this is my son, Lord Blenavon."

Lord Blenavon's smile was evidently meant to be friendly, but his expression belied it. He was slightly taller than his father, and his cast of features was altogether different. His cheeks were pale, almost sunken, his eyes were too close together, and they had the dimness of the roue or the habitual dyspeptic. His lips were too full, his chin too receding, and he was almost bald.

"How are you, Mr. Ducaine?" he said. "Awful hour to be out of bed, isn't it? and all for the slaying of a few fat and innocent birds. Last and see, wasn't I at Magdalen with you?"

"I came up in your last year," I reminded him.

"Ah, yes, I remember," he drawled. "Terrible close worker you were, too. Are you breakfasting downstairs, sir?"

"I think that I had better," the Duke said. "I suppose you brought some men with you?"

"Half a dozen," Lord Blenavon answered, "including his Royal Highness."

The Duke thrust all his letters into his drawer, and locked them up with a little exclamation of relief.

"I will come down with you," he said. "Mr. Ducaine, you will join us."

I would have excused myself, for indeed I was weary, and the thought of a bath and rest at home was more attractive. But the Duke had a way of expressing his wishes in a manner which it was scarcely possible to mistake, and I gathered that he desired me to accept his invitation. We all descended the stairs together.

CHAPTER XI.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS.

The long dining-room was almost filled with a troop of guests who had arrived on the previous day. Most of the men were gathered round the huge sideboard, on which was a formidable array of silver-covered hot-water dishes. Places were laid along the flower-decked table for thirty or forty. I stood apart for a few moments whilst the Duke was greeting some of his guests. Ray, who was sitting alone, motioned me to a place by him.

"Come and sit here, Ducaine," he said; "that is," he added, with a sudden sarcastic gleam in his dark eyes, "unless you still have what the novelists call an unconquerable antipathy to me. I don't want to rob you of your appetite."

"I did not expect to see you down here again so soon, Colonel Ray," I answered gravely. "I congratulate you upon your nerves."

Ray laughed softly to himself.

"You would have me go shuddering past the fatal spot, I suppose, with shaking knees and averted head, eh? On the contrary, I have been down on the sands for more than an hour this morning and have returned with an excellent appetite."

I looked at him curiously.

"I saw you returning," I said. "Your boots looked as though you had been wading in the wet sand. You were not there without a purpose."

"I was not," he admitted. "I seldom do anything without a purpose."

For a moment he abandoned the subject. He proceeded calmly with his breakfast, and addressed a few remarks to a man across the table, a man with short cropped hair and beard, and a shooting dress of sombre black.

"You are quite right," he said, turning towards me suddenly. "I had a purpose in going there. I thought that the gentleman whose untimely fate has enlisted your sympathies, might have dropped something which would have been useful to me."

For the moment I forgot this man's kindness to me. I looked at him with a shudder.

"If you are in earnest," I said, "I trust that you were unsuccessful."

I fancied that there was that in his glance which suggested the St. Bernard looking down on the terrier, and I chafed at it.

"It would have been better for you, he said, grimly, "had my search met with better result."

HIS FAREWELL

WHITBY, OCT. 24.—Rev. W. R. Tighe, pastor of the Baptist Church here, for the past four years, preached his farewell sermon last evening to a congregation which crowded the church. Mr. Tighe leaves for Parry Sound, where he has accepted a call. On Wednesday evening of last week the Baptist congregation presented Mr. and Mrs. Tighe with an address and valuable gifts in recognition of their work. On Saturday evening a dozen of the business men of the town, representing all the denominations, met Mr. Tighe in Postmaster Howden's private office and presented him with a purse of gold. Speeches complimentary to Mr. Tighe were made by all present.

Rev. Mr. Tighe is well known in Peterborough, and is a son of Mr. Tighe of Smith.

And Find Out If You Have Kidney Disorders. Also Make This Test.

Have you pains in the back over the kidneys?

Have you urinary disorders?

Do you suffer from severe headaches, dizziness or defective eyesight?

Is the skin dry and harsh?

Are you failing in health and strength and suffering from rheumatic pains or swelling of the limbs?

These are a few of the symptoms of kidney disease, and here is the test.

If the urine after standing for twenty-four hours is cloudy, milky or has particles floating about in it, or if there is a sediment in the bottom of the vessel, your kidneys are diseased.

There is no time to lose in beginning the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Delay means the development of Bright's disease, and you do not want to take any chances with that. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills will help you more quickly than any treatment you can obtain, and that is one reason why they are so successful and popular.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, South Augusta, Grenville county, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills are an excellent medicine." This statement is certified to by the Rev. E. H. Emett, Baptist minister, of Brockville, Ont.

WORLD'S DEBT TO CANADA

A Wonderful Achievement

Discovery of "Fruit-a-tives" has meant health for all

Canada's fame does not rest solely on her furs and wheat fields. Her rise in the esteem of the world is not due to her Cobalt mines. It is the work of her great men that has made her great. A graduate of McGill University has won lasting renown for his original researches in the realms of Physics.

Everyone knows that fruit is wholesome, when eaten judiciously. Physicians generally recognize the fact that fruit juices have a beneficial effect on the various organs of the body.

It remained for a Canadian physician to discover a process whereby the medicinal action of fruit could be so increased as to make the intensified juices a wonderful cure.

"Fruit-a-tives" is this combination of fruit juices and tonics. Since its introduction to the public, "Fruit-a-tives" has met with a success accorded to no other medicine in the world. The reason is plain. "Fruit-a-tives" is the one remedy that is actually made of fruit, and is the only remedy that naturally cures Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Headaches, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Backache, Kidney and Skin Troubles. At all dealers at 50c, a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c., or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WHY LOROS ARE TORIES.

A Great Many Liberals Have Changed Their Point of View.

In connection with any proposals by the Liberal party for reforming the House of Lords it has always been urged against them that the peers of their creating have no sooner taken their seats in the Upper House than their principles undergo an acute reversal, and they themselves become steady supporters of the status quo, their successors in the peerage becoming frankly Conservative, writes J. K. Lamont in The Graphic. That this tendency is continually at work in the case of most of the Liberal peerages admits of practically no argument. Of the members of the House of Lords only seventy-five voted for the budget in November last, as against 350 for its rejection, so we may take the former figure as the voting strength of the Liberal party in the Second Chamber, though one of their political organs claims 93. This danger cannot have been far absent from the minds of those responsible for the ultimate selection of the "five hundred" new peers suggested to be created. The double difficulty of selecting suitable nominees from among the many applicants for the doubtful honor, and of trusting to their "same-mindedness" when they got to the Upper House, must have gone far towards the present conference. It is extremely doubtful indeed if such a wholesale creation of peers was ever within the actual range of practical politics.

Cynically minded people might find a reason for the reforming conviction of a Liberal peer giving way to Conservatism in the answer of Browning's humbly born Pope, when asked as to why he had taken down his fisherman-father's net. "Son, it has caught the fish." We can scarcely, however, accept that theory as sufficient. Although the Liberal party has for many years been identified with the reform of the Upper House, it is only the extremists of the party who have committed themselves to a policy of wholesale extermination, with which the moderate minds of both the great parties of the state have no sympathy. After all, the division line between Conservative and Liberal is very narrow.

Apart from this conservative outlook there is for the majority of peers, by whichever party created, a more personal and, perhaps, more powerful attitude towards the House of Lords,—the ambition to found a family. As Mr. Jenks tells us, "the desire to hand a great position over to one's children is one of the deepest instincts of average humanity"; and that desire, coupled with a preference for a male heir, is responsible for many a world tragedy, from the patriarchal days of Abraham and Hagar to the imperial days of Caesar Augustus and Scribonia and the heartless conduct of Napoleon to the despised Josephine. It is also a curious fact that the old patrimonial idea of the family has lingered longer in the upper strata of society than in the lower or democratic. The latter, always impatient of control, even as children, owe no obedience to their parents but that exacted by brute force. In the former, and perhaps especially when the head of the family has some distinctive honor, such as a peerage, all the younger branches look up to the possessor of the family honor as the head, the paterfamilias, with an admitted right of moral supervision over the conduct of each; while he in turn is bound to give to all his protection and aid. A striking instance of this occurred a very few years ago, when the Duke of Marlborough as head of the Churchill family, repudiated aspersions cast by a daily newspaper on Lord Randolph Churchill in the course of a review of the present Home Secretary's record of his father's life. The ambition of Nelson was "a peerage or Westminster Abbey," and so long as human nature is constituted as it is, there will never be any dearth of men with a like ambition.

The Bedroom Lamp.

When using a kerosene lamp in a bedroom place it in front of the mirror, but not near enough for it to heat the glass. There will be about twice as much light, the mirror acting like a reflector.

A Moon Record.

There was no full moon in the whole of February, 1866. According to astronomers this will not occur again until the year 2409962.

Tinted Paper.

The origin of blue tinted paper came about by a mere slip of the hand. The wife of William East, an English papermaker, accidentally let blue pack fall into one of the vats of pulp.

Thickening of the Nails.

This annoying condition of the nails may sometimes be helped by trimming and scraping the nails, then rubbing the ends of the fingers with green soap. Keep up that rubbing vigorously, as the friction is excellent. Rinse well with hot water, then very cold.

CHIEF OF THE R.N.W.M.P.

Lt.-Col. White Has Been Forty One Years In the Public Service.

Lieut.-Col. Frederick White, C.M.G., Comptroller of the Royal North-West ounted Police, who has just returned to Ottawa from a lengthy tour of inspection over the vast territory covered by the splendid force under his direction, is one of the oldest officials of the Dominion Government, having been connected with the public service since March 1, 1869, when he removed from Montreal to Ottawa to accept a third-class clerkship in the Department of Justice. The Comptroller grew into his present position by accident almost. Being a clerk in the Justice Department and acting as a sort of extra secretary to Sir John Macdonald, who personally held himself responsible for the raising of the Mounted Police when the far west was opened up, much of the correspondence and other work connected with the work of organization passed over his desk, and as details became more and more technical and complex he became the office authority at Ottawa on the subject. In November, 1878, he was given the title of Comptroller, but it did not imply the responsibility since conferred upon the position. By 1883 the work attaching to the office had become so important that the Comptroller had the status of a deputy head conferred upon him, and he was relieved of other duties. Since then, as the force has increased, and the country patrolled has been settled and extended, the work attaching to the position has increased tremendously. Until his death, Sir John Macdonald took the closest personal interest in the force, and since Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been Premier, he has kept the Mounted Police Department directly under his personal supervision, but it is generally known that Colonel White has always been given a pretty free hand with the administration of the force. Of course, the actual command is vested in the Commissioner at Regina, at present Major Perry, but those who know are disposed to award to the Comptroller a great deal of credit for the fine work the force with which he has been so long identified has accomplished. Colonel White was born in Birmingham, England, in 1847, and was educated there. On first coming to Canada he lived for several years in Montreal, while resident in the commercial metropolis serving as a private in the Victoria Rifles. That was all the soldiering he has done up to the time he became connected with the Mounted Police, but some years later he took a commission in the Governor-General's Foot Guards and rose to the rank of captain. He held no other military title until after the South African war, when he was given the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the militia in recognition of his assistance in organizing and equipping the Canadian contingents for South Africa, particularly the mounted units. It is not generally known that, under the provisions of the Northwest Territories Lieut.-Col. White was in 1906, appointed Commissioner of the Northwest Territories to administer the Government of the said Territories so that he is practically administrator of all the unorganized territory of the Dominion, including Canada's share of the North Pole. Personally, Col. White is one of the most courteous and unassuming men, with nothing in his kindly manner and low musical voice to indicate the firmness and discipline which have directed the preservation of the peace for so many years over half of the Dominion.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Earl Grey's Trip.

Nothing in the period of Earl Grey's Governor-Generalship of Canada has been more spectacular or more indicative of his interest in the wide Dominion which he serves than the journey to and across Hudson Bay on which he has been engaged. To brave the hardships of the canoe ride from Norway House, a Hudson Bay post on the Nelson River, to Fort Churchill is sacrifice worthy of all praise. From that point across the bay to Hudson Straits and home to Quebec by the Atlantic the journey was made in a Government steamer. The result of this tour is to add materially to His Excellency's knowledge of the oft-termed "Frozen North," a term which Earl Grey himself expects to have occasion to considerably modify.

The arrival of the Governor-General at Norway House took place in a drenching rain, but fifty Indians, armed with shotguns and rifles, lent a festive air to the event by firing a salute. A program of sports had been arranged for His Excellency's entertainment, but this had to be abandoned owing to unfavorable weather. A welcome from the Cree Indians took the form of a banner with a motto in their own language which, translated, read: "Welcome from the people of the north." The buildings of the Hudson Bay post were also lavishly decorated with flags and bunting.

His Excellency's party left, on the weather clearing, a couple of days later, on their long paddle to Hudson Bay. The party occupied twelve canoes. They were prepared for long days in the canoe and camping by the wayside at night, on which occasion the Union Jack would be hoisted as a mute symbol of the Vice-Regal character of the notable but unostentatious travelers in the wilderness.

Keep Baby's Skin Clear

Mothers, do you realize the importance of caring for baby's tender, easily irritated skin? Neglect or unsuitable methods may give rise to simple rashes or tiny sores. Torturing, disfiguring humors follow and threaten to become permanent. Not only is Cuticura Soap the purest and sweetest for baby's bath but, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it affords the speediest and most economical method of clearing baby's skin and scalp of eczemas, rashes, itchings and irritations, and of establishing a permanent condition of skin and hair health.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists everywhere. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, Mass. Send for free Cuticura Book on the care of skin and scalp.

Fate of a Wrecked City.

History affords many cases of one city being built above the ruins of another. There have been some notable exceptions, but quite often when a city has suddenly been wiped out of existence by war or fire or a great cataclysm of nature it has been rebuilt within a short time. In some instances this process has been several times repeated on the same site. The list of exceptions now receives an addition in the city of St. Pierre, Martinique. Absolutely nothing has been done toward restoring the city in which the entire population of over 25,000 people met an awful death when Mont Pelee blew off its top in May, 1902. Itank tropic vegetation is rapidly covering the charred and fallen walls and choking the silent streets.—Youth's Companion.

Fighting the Hat.

A "no hat" brigade fashioned after the one which is thriving in London has been formed in Vienna. "The hat," says one of the members, "is a superfluous article of man's wearing apparel. It deprives the head of needed air and sunshine, retards the growth and in many instances kills the hair and is a source of inconvenience and considerable expense. At no time does the member of our league appreciate his resolution to go bareheaded so much as when he visits a theater or opera. The crush hat has gone out of style; the cylinder takes up too much room, and it is never improved by storage in a theater wardrobe. No man who once joins our ranks will desert; but, like taking passage, it requires a little courage."

Many Sects in London.

London has at least forty-five different denominations of Christians. Glasgow boasts its thirty-four religious bodies and Edinburgh its twenty-five. In spite of the Methodist union three years ago there are still five or six variations of Methodist societies in London, while there are two other "reformed" offshoots from the Church of England, three different Baptist bodies and three kinds of Presbyterians—English, Scotch and Welsh.—London Globe.

Studying the Soil.

A modern view of the soil regards it as alive. It is a matrix supporting various definite groups of micro-organisms, and recent investigations suggest the possibility of determining by bacteriological diagnosis the crop producing capacities of different soils, as well as their causes. It has been shown within the past few years that the action of the nitrifying bacteria corresponds fairly well with the productiveness of the soils under field conditions.

Tragedy in Horsedom.

A grievous event happened one day recently on a farm near Carlton, when "Dan," an aged and superannuated horse, deliberately committed suicide. After being a faithful old servant for many years and fearing the approach of another winter, he jumped upon a picket fence and injured himself, but was soon fixed up by the farrier. But Dan's will was too strong to be baulked in that way, so he put his head into an opening in a rail fence, and throwing himself was strangled to death.—Ontario, Belleville.

Shoes.

The earliest mention of shoes is in an Egyptian papyrus about 2,300 years before Christ.

FUN IN THE HOUSE.

J. B. Morin Was a Source of Joy to the Commoners.

J. B. Morin, once deputy from Dorchester, Quebec, got off a rich one in the House of Commons. He was impaling the late J. Israel Tarte, and said, in a very climax of vehemence: "The honorable gentleman reminds me of Pontius Pilate. The only difference is that when Pontius Pilate betrayed his Saviour, he went and hung himself."

It was in that speech that Morin denounced the Yukon Railway, which was designed to run from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake—"From a snowball to an icicle," Mr. Morin said. Mackenzie and Mann were to build it in the early days of Yukon gold discoveries, and were to get a land subsidy from the Government. M. Morin wanted to point out that the contractors would build some sort of road just to get the land, which was thought to be auriferous, and that, having got the grant, they would not care if the road was never run. But he didn't put it that way. He said: "When they build this road, what will they say? They will say, 'To hell with the road.'" This brought the Speaker, the late Sir James Edgar, smiling to his feet. He had let M. Morin have full swing until now, and he had enjoyed the fun immensely. But this was too much. The Dorchester man saw him rise and knew what it meant. "I accept the apology—I accept the apology," M. Morin exclaimed, while he wildly motioned the Speaker to sit down. Every member of the House was side-sore laughing at M. Morin's unconscious humor, but the good feeling it provoked did not last long. Sir Charles Tupper was leader of the Opposition then, and when he rose to speak in the early hours of the morning, there was a different atmosphere. Dealing with Hon. Clifford Sifton's statement that he would get the contractors to do anything that public interest required but that was not in the contract, he said: "It reminds me of the story of the dog." Immediately the "burdocks in the back benches" began to bark and Sir Charles had difficulty in getting through his story. The man was boasting of his dog's obedience to his orders. To illustrate it to his friend, he said: "Fido, go out of the room." Fido crawled under the table. "Or under the table," added his master.—Toronto Weekly Star.

Heard at the Fair.

There is no place where an observant person may see more types than at the National Exhibition, and he can overhear many funny things such as the young woman who got impatient with the Grenadier Guards' Band because so many of their selections lacked the amount of sound which she liked. "What is the use of having those big brass horns if they do not blow them?" she inquired as she departed in disgust.

One old veteran was very anxious to make known that he objected to the way in which everybody praised the English band. He called upon the representatives of one paper to express his disapproval. It was all right, he declared, to praise it, but to say that it was the best band in the Old Land incensed him. Next day he called again to announce that he had changed his mind. "It is a fine band," he said. "I was talking to the cornet soloist and he told me that he used to belong to the Black Watch. Ah, you ought to hear them."

"You are Scotch," said the newspaper man, and the veteran wondered how he knew.

One of those women who like to edify the company with which she travels occupied a reserved seat in the grandstand with a couple of friends. The chief novelty in the program was a cock fight between a man dressed as a chanticleer and a real bird. The amusement was furnished by the deadly earnestness of the game cock in his onslaught upon his big opponent.

When it was all over, the edifying woman turned to her friends: "That is part of a play which is just now the rage of Paris," she said.

"You don't say," replied one of the other women. "Well, I don't think very much of it."

"Neither do I," admitted the edifying person, "but you see it is French."

Fussy Mothers.

Children are often worried because their mothers are too attentive and continually reprove the small ones without reason. A child should be let alone and be allowed to play or amuse itself in its own way without the constant direction of a nervous mother. A boy, for example, enjoys more a few simple toys and something which his own ingenuity has worked out than the most elaborate plaything which has been bought. In the same way the little girl will lavish her affections on a misshapen doll, probably made at home, while the most artistic production of the toyshop will lie in state, to be taken up on rare occasions.

Some One Else Had Been There.

When little Bertha was first allowed to eat cherries it was impressed on her that she must not swallow any stones. A short time afterward she was given the cooked cherries from a cherry pie. Looking up, she asked quickly: "Who spit out the stones"—Delineator.

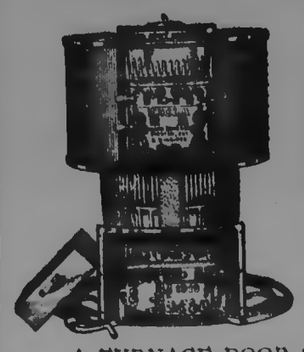
HECLA FURNACE

—And The Little Things That Mean So Much to You

We are not going to talk about the big features of the "Hecla"—the FUSED JOINTS, that keep the house free of gas and smoke—or the STEEL RIBBED FIREPOT, that saves one ton of coal in seven.

The talk is of little things that our 30 years experience has perfected.

A LARGE DOOR, big enough to take the biggest shovel of coal or chunk of wood.



A DUST FLUE, that actually carries off all dust so that you don't look as if you had fallen in the flour barrel after you shake the furnace.

A DAMPER REGULATOR, by which you can regulate the drafts and checks without going into the cellar.

A FURNACE DOOR that really locks, and locks airtight. INDIVIDUAL GRATE BARS that enable you to clean your fire without getting down on your knees with a poker.

There are many other big and little things about the "Hecla" that should be familiar to every man who is going to put in a new furnace this year.

They are all illustrated and described in our new furnace book, "Hecla Heated Homes."

OUR NINE MAN INVASION of BRAZIL

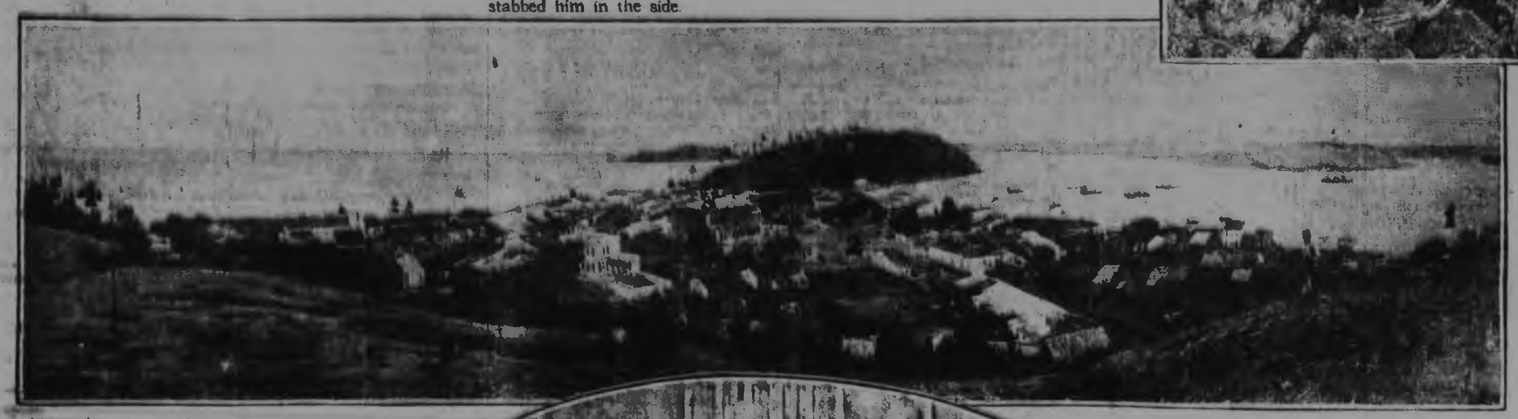
Some of the Men We Fought

Bridge Behind Ilheos



Ilheos, Brazil.—1 Where Expedition Landed. 2 Where Major Davis Fell. 3 Building from Which Government Troops Opened Fire. 4 Where Invaders Left the Town

BY LIEUT. GEORGE H. VICE

IN all history there are few stories of more desperate endeavors than the one hereafter related. Fragments of it have appeared in the newspapers during the period that has elapsed since 1907, when nine reckless adventurers from New York and one Brazilian Portuguese invaded Brazil with a view to overthrowing the government, but the full story is told here for the first time. Nothing could be more typical of the true spirit of adventure pure and simple, and the reckless courage of the men is almost surpassing belief.

NONE of us knew in the beginning, and those of us left alive have no knowledge now, of just what the reasons were for our invasion of Brazil. The one man who might be able to tell something, Sebastio H. L. de Magalli, is ending his days in a madman's cell in Estudo de Bahia. If he represented some ambitious politicians in Brazil we never knew who they were, and it may have been that he was insane when we first met him. The whole expedition, reviewing its incidents now, was merely the futile dashing of a handful of human pebbles against the stone wall of a great and resourceful nation. We made things lively for a time, however.

In September, 1907, there appeared in various New York papers advertisements for men of adventurous nature and military experience who would like to join an expedition. I answered one of the advertisements and received in reply a long typewritten prospectus, in which the sender said he was commissioned to raise a regiment of colonists who might be called upon for military service. I was ready for anything, and enlisted after a conference with Mr. Magalli, who had sent me the prospectus.

We were to equip ourselves, each with a Remington carbine, four hundred rounds of ammunition and the standard cavalry accoutrements for tropical service, the whole cost to each individual being $200. After some little time Magalli said he had been instructed to pick out thirty-five men to send in advance to Brazil, this group to go to the interior as commissioned officers to take charge of bodies of men.

I went aboard the steamship Byron, of the Lamport & [illegible] line, in New York November 4 to sail with the thirty-five, and found that we numbered but nine. The others could not raise the money. Then was the moment of decision. We could have backed out just as well as not, but we were unanimous in our decision to go ahead and see what we could do. The nine men, including Magalli, were as follows:—

Cecil Borer, an English actor and former lieutenant in the Boer war.

Major Davies, a Welshman, retired from the British army.

Hubert Wilson and George Kincaid, Irish boys, late of the Canadian Mounted Rifles and the Northwestern Mounted Police.

Samuel R. Parker, a typical young New Yorker, an electrical engineer.

George Gordon, a Scotchman.

George H. Vice, Hackensack, N. J.

We were still blind as to our real object and destination when we arrived at Bahia November 19, save that Magalli said he had decided that we should go to Ilheos from Bahia by water if we could get away without being interfered with, traverse the State of Bahia peacefully and get into the State of Minas Geraes, where we would issue a declaration of revolution and begin to take possession of the country and the mines. He said he believed we could raise a sufficient following after two or three victories to get a revolution properly under way. We would have to capture a few garrisoned towns before we could expect to be taken seriously.

First we bought good mounts for all of us and then Magalli made an arrangement with the captain of a little bark, the Unione, to take us to Ilheos. To try to get aboard surreptitiously might mean failure at the outset, so we marched down to the custom house, carrying our arms, went straight through after passing regular inspection and got aboard without one word of a suspicious nature being said to us or one finger lifted against us. We were so few in number that to have regarded us as a revolutionary expedition would have been absurd. Some of the officials paid dearly for their carelessness later, however.

Mistaken for Circus Men.

When we debarked at Ilheos we camped on the beach, and as the town had been expecting the arrival of the yearly circus we were taken at first for an advance section of the same. The town of Ilheos is built in a sort of semi-circle on an island. The new city hall, a two story affair, is built on a ridge in the centre of the town, which runs to a sharp rise of hills at the back and out into a jut of land, shaped like a gigantic loaf of bread, in front of the city. This jut of land makes the shelter for the harbor.

A canal cuts off the island, and it is spanned by a bridge over which runs the road to the interior. To leave the city we must move from our camp on the beach directly through the heart of the town, ascend and cross the ridge and descend to the bridge on the other side. It was a nasty trap and a bad move at best, so we debated the matter twenty-four hours endeavoring to allay native curiosity concerning us.

It appears, however, that we succeeded in arousing their suspicions all the more. At last Major Davies, who was a brave, gallant and capable man, insisted that to remain where we were meant our certain capture, and if we were going to invade Brazil we might as well start out and do it right. First we cut all the wires running out on our side of town. Brazil has telegraph lines where it will not have railroads for another fifty years. Political information is very necessary.

We broke camp and rode slowly and guardedly into the city, seeing, to our surprise, that a part of the company of infantry garrisoning the place was making haste to occupy the city hall. We were compelled to move directly toward it, however, and to move up hill in the open.

The Battle.

When within easy range and apparently moving along peacefully they began to fire on us, which was unwarranted, as we had made no offensive move. In ten seconds the battle was on, however. Gordon had his horse killed under him before he could dismount. All we could see were Brazilian rifles protruding from the windows, and getting proper cover we began a most interesting duel in marksmanship in which we bested them nicely. We learned afterward that we killed one soldier and wounded a large number of others, but we decreased the fire to such an extent that we were able to work around where we could make a dash for the bridge.

Gordon, being dismounted, ran with us, hoping to be able to pick up a horse, as horses were usually plentiful, but when he did not find one he called to us to go ahead and we went. He walked up to the home of a Brazilian colonel of militia in the residential section, pursued at a respectful distance by some of the colonel's men, and when he tendered the colonel the surrender of his revolver the gallant commander of the district turned back somersault to get out of the window, his feelings not permitting him to stay and receive it.

A perfect torrent of bullets began to pour into the windows of the room in which Gordon was left standing, and dropping to the floor he emptied his revolver into the mass of his assailants and then writhed in pretended death agony, at last lying still. They then ventured into the room and he got up and surrendered. He died not a great while thereafter, however.

Our fight was a bitter one, but we had succeeded in our manoeuvre, suffering one terrible loss. Major Davis was shot in the eye and died before we could get him back on his horse, so we went on to the bridge, leaving his body behind us.

When out of range we cut the remaining wires. At least we thought we did, but there was one that ran off in another direction through a chain of villages, and very shortly a message was gotten through to Bahia that revolution had broken out at Ilheos and the revolutionists were bound into the interior. A gunboat and a large body of troops were despatched at once. Here again the Brazilians moved too rapidly. We had proclaimed no revolution and our actual status was merely that of a body of armed and mounted travellers of foreign birth and citizenship.

The tropical Brazilian road is a terrible, terrible thing. When the rainy season obtains it washes holes in the clay and in the dry season these ridges, ruts and pits become as hard as rock. It was over such a track that we rode fast and furious for the next twenty-four hours.

The Flight.

We knew there would be pursuit and there was but one hope—to forge our way as fast as possible into the interior. We were few in number, lightly equipped and therefore much more mobile than any military troop they could send after us. We rode till ten o'clock at night, when we struck a big town, which we learned was Aguas Prietos, or the Black Falls of the Rio Cachoeira.

Announcing that we were on our way to an interior plantation, we obtained rest and refreshments, but blood stains on us and bullet scratches on our horses alarmed the hotel keeper, and we left none too soon. To cross the river we were compelled to dismount, unsaddle and swim our horses, while our arms and equipment were taken over in canoes. This proceeding was almost as dangerous as fighting.

It was very fortunate, as I have hinted, that we left when we did, for the commandant at Ilheos was cunning if not overcourageous. He sent his cleverest officer in a well manned canoe up the river to the falls and that worthy landed very shortly after we were on our way inland once more.

Four stages more we pressed ahead until men and horses were nearly ready to drop from fatigue. The country was desperately wild in some places and once we heard the distant clangor of a drum. Moving quietly we came upon a settlement of naked natives, who were holding an arrow dance, which we could see through a gap in the tropical growth.

Pfannebecker took a picture at long range of the scene, which shows the character of the country perfectly. Through the little gap in the jungle one can see the natives in their ceremony, unobserved, as they believed. Making a detour we went on our way, coming again to a more civilized region, passing through a number of small towns and reaching Macumba at last, where we were so tired that it was decided to rest.

Our choice of camp was exceedingly poor. It was on the level beyond the town in a cocoa grove and was not at all a fighting position. The townspeople were very friendly and did not seem to notice the signs of the battle at Ilheos.

We turned in at once for a good sound sleep. Pfannebecker insisted on standing guard, though no one but him imagined that there was any possible danger from pursuit then. We did not know that Magalli had left a declaration of the revolution in the city behind us, to be published after we had crossed the river. This put us in the field as revolutionists to all intents and purposes and under the law laid us open to any loyal Brazilian's attack.

There were two approaches to our camp, one from the east and one from the west, as the river was on the south and there was an impenetrable forest on the north.

Awakened by Shots.

I was awakened by hearing shots and leaped to my rifle, hearing Magalli cry, "Get into the woods with the ammunition." I caught up two belts and plunged out among the trees with the others.

Pfannebecker had been standing guard when suddenly, about fifty rods in front of him, a whistle sounded in the bush and a force of five hundred men leaped out. Running backward and firing his revolver into them he actually held them in check long enough to sound the alarm. The force was com, osed of pursuers from Aguas Prietos and reinforcements from Macumba.

Then began as desperate a fight as any man could wish to see. Selecting individual positions behind trees or hummocks of earth, fern or fallen logs we opened fire on them and began marksmen's work. For a while we had things pretty much our way until a part of the force worked around behind us, coming in from the other direction, and then disaster overtook us.

A group pounced on Borer and after he had shot two of them two others got hold of his rifle and while he was scuffling a fifth man stabbed him in the side and another one struck him a swinging blow with the butt of a gun that mashed his face out of all recognizable shape.

Parker and the Kincaids fought like demons until they were overwhelmed, one of the Kincaids breaking two men's arms simply with blows. I was doing the best I could, but began to receive one wound after another, then a full charge from a slug loaded gun struck me and I fell with a total of forty-two wounds. Strange to say, though I was stabbed and shot in the abdomen, was shot through both thighs, both arms were helpless and the bones of one wrist half shot away, I did not lose consciousness and remember cursing Pfannebecker because the worst that had happened to him was a large number of bullet holes through his clothes, and a sprained wrist from knocking down Brasileros.

Jubilant Captors.

When we were all under guard and disarmed the victors began a mad demonstration of joy. Their braggadocio was laughable to see and they headed us straight back for Aguas Prietos. Not satisfied with the way in which they had done us up, they tried to make me walk, but I could not, and then they forced my comrades to carry me, but that was an awful ordeal for them and I chose to try to ride a horse without a saddle.

Wounded as I was I stuck for twenty miles over the rough roads and was then placed in a canoe, taken down the river to Ilheos and eventually to the hospital of Santa Maria at Bahia. I did not leave there till taken in a stretcher to Ilheos for trial, which resulted in practical acquittal, though Baron Rio Branco, Brazilian Minister of War, appealed on behalf of the government. He succeeded in getting a second trial, to which I was not taken, so that I was not liberated until the spring of the present year, reaching New York on May 8.

It was a sorry crowd that was dumped into the prison in the basement of the city hall at Ilheos. Their different experiences would require much more space than I am allowed. Every one of them had been cruelly beaten and maltreated by the captors, who, once they had them disarmed, had mobbed them and tried to kill them. Magalli was badly wounded in both legs and in the head. Two of the soldiers guarding the prisoners were shot by bullets aimed at the prisoners.

At Aguas Prietos the populace had received the "insurrectos" with open arms. The fact was apparent that if the revolution had been declared before we left the story might have been a very different one. The fight we had put up made us friends on every hand and during the two years and two days that they were in jail they were showered with gifts and attentions and in the second trial there was no difficulty whatsoever about their acquittal. Parker became an engineer on the new railroad building in the State of Bahia. Pfannebecker will return to the country to assume an excellent position. The Kincaids are off adventuring elsewhere. Magalli is insane and there is an end of the story.

One interesting thing is the hero that the people made of Magalli. Things were named for him as they were named for Trilby in the Trilby craze in America. One of the new stores that was christened, as South Americans christen their places of business, was "Republica Magalli" in big letters on the wall of it. He, poor fellow, is in no condition to enjoy his celebrity and it will be a long time before I myself can move without wrenching a wounded part.

A BOOKMAN'S PARADISE

PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY IS A REFUGE FROM THE STORM.

Great Round Hall Is Fairly Teeming With Volumes of All Sorts—Staid Statesmen Have the Most Frivolous Tastes In Literature — Cartwright Reads Henty and Coulter Likes Nick Carter—Rare Tomes.

If you are really a bookish man, one of whom it can be truthfully said that "a jolly good book wherein to look is more to him than gold," and if you happen to be visiting the Parliamentary Buildings at Ottawa and are perhaps heartily tired of sitting in the Visitors' Gallery and listening to the prosy maunderings of ill-advised members of Parliament, I can tell you of a sure retreat where you will be shut away from all the petty noises of the world of politics, and where you can "loaf and invite your soul" in the silent company of the immortals, writes Peter Donovan in Saturday Night. But first you must slip past the white-bearded old men who are the presiding deities of the corridors of the House of Commons. Once safely by them, you come to a pair of swinging doors, through whose glass panes you look into a long room filled with high desks and files and files of papers hanging from racks. This is the reading-room, and you must go around by the wall to the door in the back of the room, opening into a long passage.

Then suddenly it bursts upon you—the bookman's oasis in the political desert. You have come without warning into a great round hall, running up to a point, like the inside of a mighty cone. And it is lined with books, rows and rows of stately volumes stretching in all directions. There are books to right of you, and books to left of you, and books above and below.

It is certainly a bookman's paradise. Even the air of the place is bookish, and it is filled with the mellow odors of well-tanned sheepskin and morocco. One sometimes hears mention of the odor of sanctity. That, however, is a mere figure of speech. But here is a real odor, the odor of learning, a rich pervading atmosphere, full of the aroma of garnered thought, such as always hangs over well-stocked and ancient libraries. Those who are not of the elect might describe it as a certain mustiness, but to the book-lover it is dearer than nard and cassia and all their balmy fragrance.

The appeal to one's sense of color is even stronger. The mellow light floating down from above, fills the hall like a benediction. And in its gentle glow the rich tints of gorgeous bindings blend softly on the shelves. Everywhere about are wonderful reds and dark greens and browns, touched with gold by the deft hands of the tooler. In strong and startling contrast to this rises a tall white statue of Queen Victoria in the centre of the room. It shows a truly regal figure, slender and stately, and it dominates the hall like the presiding deity of a temple.

The use of the library naturally affects the choice of books on its shelves; and one is not surprised to find that the law-library alone consists of over twenty-five thousand volumes. There is also a very large department devoted to works on Canadian history and Canadian topography. In fact, the library contains almost every book on Canada that ever was published, and it is a perfect storehouse for anyone who is interested in the Dominion and the story of its development.

For those who are interested in statistics, it may be pointed out that there are over three hundred thousand volumes in the library. Of these a large proportion are French. The sum of $10,000 a year is provided for the purchase of books, and of this one-third is spent on French publications. There is also an allowance of $1,000 a year for old books on Canada and America generally.

In spite of the serious purpose of the library, there is a considerable amount of fiction purchased—on the Q.T., as it were. This may be regarded in the light of an amiable concession to the weakness for romance of the wives and daughters of Senators and members of Parliament. Though it must not be supposed that it is only the women who read the "best-sellers" which find their way into these solemn precincts. On the contrary, some famous Parliamentarians are among the most voracious consumers of current fiction. There is that great old politician, Sir Richard Cartwright, who is said to read "everything in fiction that comes out." There is no romance too fluffy, no tale of adventure too blood-curdling, for this veteran of Canadian statecraft. It seems that he is especially fond of G. A. Henty, the old war-correspondent, who became the most prolific and popular of story-writers for boys.

There is one very interesting department of the library which the casual looker-in does not see, as it is stored away in the private office of Mr Deecelles, the senior librarian.

This department consists of rare old books of various kinds, but principally volumes dealing with the earliest days of Canada. For instance, there is an original edition of Champlain's voyages, published in 1613. And a beautiful book it is, the paper and printing being as good as when it left the press. I wonder how many of our modern factory-made books would stand that test. There is also an original edition of the narrative of L'Escarbot, the cheery chronicler who accompanied Champlain to Acadia, and who lived through some of the hardest and most stirring times of that romantic settlement.

Another very valuable feature of this collection is the complete set—with one or two exceptions—of the original editions of the Jesuit Relations, which have served as authorities for so much of early Canadian story. The first novel published in Canada also forms part of the collection. It is "Emily Montague," by Mrs Brooks.

After La Grippe

"I had suffered several weeks with LaGrippe. Had pains in my head and eyes. It felt as though there was a heavy weight on the top of my head, until it seemed that my brain would burst. I was so nervous that I could not rest or sleep. When I dozed off I would awake with a sudden jerking of my whole body. Dr. Miles' Nervine, Heart Remedy and Nerve and Liver Pills cured me. A number of friends have since realized the same benefits."

MRS. ALVIN H. LOCKS,
Seabrook, N. H.

The after effects of LaGrippe are often more serious than the disease, as it leaves the system in a weakened condition that invites more serious troubles, such as pneumonia, etc.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine should be taken for some time to thoroughly restore nerve strength.

Price $1.00 at your druggist. He should supply you. If he does not, send price to us, we forward prepaid.

The juice left in a jar of strawberries after the fruit has been sent to the table will make a delicious drink if a little lemon juice and ice water are added to it.

Old Olive Trees.

There are eight olive trees on the Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, which were known to have been flourishing in 1099.

Indian Swimmers.

Some of the Indians of South America are powerful swimmers and use the stroke popularly known as the "Australian crawl," which, however, they discovered for themselves.

The Glowworm.

Despite the fact science has been puzzling over the problem for many years—experimenting and analysing and dissecting—the glowworm's secret is still unsolved. We know very little more about its mysterious lamp—physiologic light the experts call it—than did our forefathers. Even its purpose is still hidden.

Chivalry.

Chivalry is from chevalier and simply means a horseman, originally used to distinguish one who rode from one who went to the wars afoot.

Romantic Career of Clancarty.

The Earl of Clancarty, whose bankruptcy has just been announced, has had a varied career since he illuminated the West End of London twenty years ago as Viscount Dunlo. He was in London being "crammed" for the Sandhurst "exam" when he was introduced at the Old Corinthian Club to Miss Belle Bilton, one of the Sisters Bilton, music hall artists. Isabel Maud Bilton was the daughter of a sergeant in the Royal Engineers. In May, 1888, at the Hampstead Registrar's office, Lord Dunlo married Miss Belle Bilton. There was a painful scene between the old Earl of Clancarty and the bridegroom, and Lord Dunlo was packed off to Australia. On his return in 1890 the Clancarty family induced him to present a petition for divorce against his wife. It was, however, dismissed. Lady Clancarty toured in "Venus" under Sir Augustus Harris' management, and in June, 1891, when the old earl died, she became Countess of Clancarty. She and her husband were reconciled, and lived in Ireland very happily, until cancer carried her off in January, 1907. In October, 1908, the Earl of Clancarty married Miss Mary Gaskin Ellis, daughter of the late Mr. W. F. Ellis, a brilliant barrister. She is very little older than her eldest stepson, Lord Kilconnel, who is twenty.

The Telltale.

A college girl told how she had been cured of the ugly habit, when a little girl, of sticking out her tongue when writing. She was working on a writing lesson one day when the teacher called to her the full length of the room:

"'Mary you are making capital L's when I asked for capital P's.'"

"How did you know that I was wrong?" the little girl asked.

"I could tell," said the teacher, "by your tongue."—Detroit Free Press.

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

1— When Jack and Jill came down the hill after their adventure with the pail whom do you think they saw? Why—

Little Boy Blue in a huppy heap
Under the haystack, fast asleep.
"We'll take," said Jack, "his horn;" said Jill,
"And blow it," added both, "we will!"

2— So they blew and blew. But the sheep didn't like it at all. They knew that it wasn't Boy Blue calling; besides, it wasn't nearly sundown. So the sheep spoke to the rams:—

"They're fresh," said the sheep;
"Knock 'em all of a heap!"

Then two old fellows got ready. "We'll show 'em," said they, and charged.

3— Then Jill got butted, and Jacky too,
And up like a shot in the air they flew,
And down again, too, just as sure as you're born,
Right on top of the cow with the crumpled horn!

Where the moon's right close and the stars begin!

And things commenced to look awful, when Jack saw something in the sky. "Ha! A rainbow!" said he.

"Saved!" cried Jill between gasps.

And they slid right down, you see,
Slid back to earth just as quick as light.

Just as lucky as they could be!

Lost in the Air.

Belmont Aviation Field, L.I., Oct. 26.—That a man can get lost in the air and remain lost for more than an hour was the amazing assertion of Count Jacques de Lasseps, made yesterday afternoon. In proof, he cited his own experience, when in his Blériot monoplane he wandered over a considerable portion of Long Island at an altitude of about 8,000 feet, vainly seeking for the aviation field, so that he might alight. When he finally did reach the ground he was benumbed with cold and a trifle unnerved from his experience.

On two occasions Count de Lesseps started to descend to a race track, only to find that it was not the right one.

The latter part of the second hourly duration contest was flown in the rain. "Bud" Mars, in a Curtiss biplane, won with 18 laps to his credit, with Claude Graham-White second, with 15 laps. McCurdy, in a Curtiss machine, was third, with 12 laps.

James Radley, of the English speed team, yesterday afternoon flew ten miles across country and back, twenty miles in all, in 19 minutes 48 2-5 seconds.

Italian in Trouble.

Guelph, Oct. 26.—Antoni Rosso, an Italian, who last April was let go on suspended sentence on a charge of assault, is again wanted by the Guelph police. Monday night, while on his way to work, James Judge, a foreman of the Guelph Pipe Mills, says the Italian met him in a lane leading to the factory and knocked him down. He claims it was because he would not give the man work, and says that had it not been for two mill hands who came to his rescue, he might have fared much worse at the hands of the Italian, who had him down and was brandishing a knife over him wildly.

Fined Editor for Contempt.

London, Oct. 26.—There was a sequel to the Crippen murder case yesterday, when the high court inflicted a fine of $1,000 upon Assistant Editor Perris for contempt of court in permitting the publication in The London Chronicle of a story asserting that Dr. Crippen had purchased hyoscin, and had confessed to the murder of his wife.

The court ordered that Perris be imprisoned until the fine is paid.

Liberia's Finances.

Paris, Oct. 26.—It is understood here that France has withdrawn its objection to the American plan for the regeneration of the finances of Liberia, provided Liberia promptly signs an agreement approving the recent frontier delimitation with France. Court Accommodation Roasted.

Winnipeg, Oct. 26.—Chief Justice Howell, in addressing the grand jury at the opening fall Assizes, ridiculed and deplored conditions of court accommodation in Winnipeg, and practically asked that body to bring in a strong request for the construction of a new building, or provision for extension.

Thirty Claimants to Estate.

Toronto, Oct. 26.—There are thirty claimants for the estate of Felix Carr, who died in squalid circumstances on West Queen street, though he had $7,901 in the bank, and after leaving it to be surmised that he was possessed of hidden treasure. The National Trust Co. will investigate the claims.

Died at 110.

The death has occurred in Ireland at the age of 110 years of Thomas Kelly, of Largantoy, Tyrone. He claimed to have been born on Jan. 1, 1800, so that at the time of his death he was 110 years and eight months old. With the exception of his hearing, which became slightly defective during the last few years, all his faculties were unimpaired, and during his long life he never consulted a doctor, took any medicine, or was known to be a day sick. He was an early riser and a hard-working farmer who ate the plain but wholesome food of the Irish peasant. He never smoked, but took an occasional glass of whisky.

Shot Director.

New Orleans, Oct. 26.—A special from Ceiba, Spanish Honduras, says that Antonio Davila, nephew of President Davila, is under arrest there charged with the murder of Jose Ballesteros, director of police. The latter was killed, following a warning given by Ballesteros to a woman with whom young Davila associated, that disorderly conduct at her house must cease. Davila left the house with the police chief, but when a short distance from the place he drew a revolver and shot the officer dead.

Home Rule All Round.

London, Oct. 26.—The idea of home rule all around as the first step toward the realization of a federal empire appears likely to become a working policy. The fact that The Times has just published a series of articles advocating a compromise, urging that the situation is quite changed since the "bloody eighties," and that the Unionists might now with dignity acquesce in, although they could not initiate, a policy of home rule, shows how Unionist hostility towards home rule is waning.

Chatham, Oct. 26.—The Board of Health have been notified by the provincial authorities that they will have to enforce the dog muzzling regulations. Since the council repealed the muzzling bylaw, the dogs have been running without muzzles. The matter will come up at the next council meeting. Until they take action the dogs are still allowed to go unmuzzled.

The Tack Cure.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 26.—William Williams, a negro, is in jail here, charged with swindling, on account of the peculiar cure from blindness which he devised. His remedy consisted in driving a tack into the back portion of a blind negro's skull, and charging $2.50 for the operation. Robert Ward, the victim, told the police court judge that the tack process was not very painful, but that Williams' manner of taking the $2.50 "hurt considerable."

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 26 1910

20-YEAR-OLD JAMES GORHAM ON TRIAL FOR HIS MOTHER'S MURDER

Case Opened Before Chancellor Sir John Boyd This Morning---Interest in the Case is Shown by Crowded Court Room---Constable Meharry and Other Eye Witnesses Tell of the Shooting Which, it is Said, Resulted in the Death of Mrs. Gorham.

CONSIDERABLE EVIDENCE HEARD THIS MORNING

The trial of James Gorham, charged with murdering his mother, Anne Gorham in May last, was commenced before Chancellor Sir John Boyd this morning with a very large crowd in the court room. The young prisoner looked pale and gaunt and followed the evidence closely throughout without evidencing much sign of emotion.

When the indictment was read, Mr. O'Connell, who is representing the prisoner answered "Not guilty."

Mr Meredith, Crown Prosecutor, then began his address to the jury. After explaining the crime of murder, he briefly related the circumstances leading up to the killing of Mrs. Gorham by her son, the prisoner at the bar. After having his breakfast in the morning of the tragedy, he said Gorham went down town for the purpose of doing some work. He had been drinking during the day and returned home in the evening in a passion, creating a disturbance and causing all manner of annoyance to his mother, calling her terrible names. Capt. White having been called in, tried to urge Gorham to behave himself, but he told the Captain that he would shoot anyone that came near him. P. C. Meharry then arrived and the prisoner was out in a field. The officer getting over the fence, proceeded to within thirty feet of the prisoner, when the latter gave the officer until he counted three to retreat. One, two, three, and a bullet went by Meharry's head, and the mother in the door, exclaimed, "I'm shot." The woman was shot in the breast and passed away three hours later. Gorham then went into the house and said, "Mother, did I shoot you: I didn't mean to." He then told his little brother to bring down his rifle, and the prisoner bade them good-bye, and told them that they would now see some fun. He went and climbed to the top of a nearby bridge, there holding the police and public at bay. There seemed to be a regular reign of terror and no man's life was apparently safe. He concluded his remarks by saying, "If men may fire rifles at random and go free, I don't know what the country is coming to."

The jury trying the case consists of Robert Cunningham, Wm. Christie, James Miller, Alex. Laing, Alex. Wood, Edward Kempt, Wm. Beck, Wm. Chmkitt, Francis Darling, Ed. Mahood, jr., Jos. Hunter and Archie Wilson.

Surveyor Fitzgerald was the first witness called and produced a map showing the Gorham house and the neighbourhood.

"I am a police constable of the city of Peterborough. I received two messages to go to Gorham's and went there about 6.15 in the evening on the day in question. The house is situated on Maria street. I met the prisoner's brother Michael, as I went over. I first saw prisoner on the track in front of the house. I went around to where I saw him standing. His sister told me he was over in the field east of the house. She meant Peck's field. I went and talked to him over the fence. He was 90 or 100 yards away. He was behind a tree and walked around in front and lifting a revolver fired into the ground. I talked with him and tried to reason with him. He said "Come on over and I'll blow your damn brains out." After a little while he said; "Come on over and I'll meet you." After I had gotten over the fence he fired a shot into the air. He said, "Don't come any nearer or I'll blow your brains out." He then counted, "One, two, three and fired. He was pointing the revolver at me. He was about twenty yards away from me and I was about forty yards from the kitchen. I heard the whistle of a bullet past my head and then some one behind me hollered, "Oh mother is shot." I told the prisoner, "Jimmy, you have shot your mother," and he replied "that he didn't care who he had shot."

The witness testified that after the shooting, Gorham had followed him for some distance when he started out for reinforcements. When he returned to the scene with Officers Newhall, McGinty and Adams he had seen the prisoner come out of the house with a rifle. Later he had seen the prisoner on the C P R. bridge and had heard him say, "I do not want to shoot Newhall, I want Meharry," and again, "Why did you not let him come out until I could get a shot at him."

The prisoner was cross-examined at some length by Mr. O'Connell as to the events on the night of the tragedy.

Capt. White's Evidence.

Capt. W. H. White, testified that he was in the neighbourhood of the Gorham house on the evening of the tragedy. Some one whom he took to be Mrs. Gorham had come running down to him and in consequence of what she had said he had gone to the house. He saw three or four women in front of the house. When he went in, boots, shirts, etc., were being thrown down the stairway by someone upstairs. Then the prisoner came downstairs and asked with an oath, "What are you doing here?" He had a revolver in his hands. He pointed a revolver at the witness and said he would blow his brains out. There was a cup containing sugar on the dining room table and the prisoner picking this up held the revolver against it, fired and blew it to pieces. Afterwards the prisoner's mother had a conversation with the prisoner. The drift of the conversation was that the prisoner seemed to have a grievance against his mother for putting him on the black list. He called his mother names and said he would blow her brains out. The witness had said to the women, "For God's sake go away from here altogether, or he'll shoot the whole lot of us." The prisoner was pofuling a revolver and holding his hand on the trigger. Then he turned and fired through the door into the house. There was no one in the house at the time. Afterwards the witness had tried to reason with the prisoner, advising him to put away his revolver and behave himself or the police would lock him up, and Gorham had replied that no ——— of a policeman would get him.

Mr. White said that he would not consider the prisoner was drunk.

Joseph Turner was called, but His Lordship pointed out that his name was not on the indictment, and it was decided to leave his evidence for the time being.

Medical Testimony.

Dr. F. P. McNulty gave medical testimony as to the death of Mrs. Gorham. He was called in about 7 o'clock. Mrs. Gorham was lying on the floor in the hall way and witness had her removed to a sofa in the dining room, where he examined her, finding a wound in the right side, near the right breast. He had seen that she was seriously injured and had her removed to the hospital, where there was a further examination. He had probed the wound and had traced it downward. Dr. McNulty also gave evidence as to the post-mortem examination.

To Mr. O'Connell, Dr. McNulty stated that the wound in the breast went downward and towards the left. He had seen the prisoner at the house on the night of the shooting and had thought he was acting in a rather excited way, "acting wildly" he put it.

Officer Newhall.

Police Constable Newhall told of the chase of Gorham which ended up with the prisoner taking refuge on the top of the C.P.R. bridge. The witness stated that they had seen Gorham go up on the bridge. "He ran up it like a cat," remarked the officer. As he and Constable Adams were running down the road towards him a shot was fired from the bridge which passed between them. They dropped by the side of the road and another bullet struck the road six feet away from them. The officer called to Gorham and told him that it was Adams with him and the prisoner replied that he did not want to shoot him or Adams; it was Meharry he wanted. Later when Officer Meharry came along the witness beckoned him to stay away, and Gorham had said, "Why did you not let me get a shot at him."

An Eye-Witness.

Percy Neil testified that he had gone down to Gorham's house that evening with a boy named Graham to borrow a valise. He had seen the prisoner and his sister there. The prisoner was trying to catch some pi... The witness was there when Constable Meharry arrived. The prisoner had gone into Peck's field when he saw the officer coming and had told him (the witness) that if Meharry asked for him to tell him that he was over in the field. The witness did so and Meharry went to the fence and tried to reason with the prisoner. Afterwards Meharry went into the field and as the witness thought, went over near some elm trees. Witness heard Gorham count one, two, three and then fire and then heard a female voice say, "I'm shot."

Mr. O'Connell closely cross-examined the witness about Constable Meharry's position in the field.

"Was he at the elm tree or at the oak tree?" he asked.

"I think he was near the elm tree."

"Did you tell anyone that Meharry stood near the oak tree?"

"I think I told Joe Graham and Mr Gordon that I thought he did."

"The police have got a hold of you since then?"

ENLARGED DEVELOPMENT OF ADVERTISING ENTERPRISE

For the first time in the history of newspaperdom in Peterborough, there appears the double-page advertisement of a commercial house that of Crossman's—in this issue. This shows three things—the enterprise of the merchant, the advance of the advertising idea, and the selection of a first-rate medium for its expression. It is a fact to be remarked that Peterborough is a great advertising city, a tribute to the progressive spirit of its business men, and a recognition of the fact that it is well worth while to expend money and effort to reach the splendid constituency of patrons of this city and the rich and populous surrounding country.

SETTLEMENT IN TWO CIVIL CASES OF LOCAL INTEREST SATISFACTORILY REACHED

Mrs. Vinette, widow of Late Isadore Vinette, gets $575 and Costs of action—was suing for $5000

WARNE CASE SETTLED

Two of the civil cases which were to have come up before the Fall Assizes, at which Chancellor Sir John Boyd is presiding, have been settled out of court. In the suit of Mrs. Vinette, widow of the late Isadore Vinette against the Otonabee Power Company, a settlement has been reached by which the plaintiff receives $575 and the costs of the action. She was suing for $5,000. O'Connell and Gordon represented the plaintiff Hall, Mould and Davidson the defendants.

In the other case, Wm. R. Warne of this city was claiming one thousand dollars from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as the result of alleged damages to an automobile by a train at one of the company's crossings. A settlement was reached, the plaintiff receiving $925, each party paying its own costs. O'Connell and Gordon appeared for the plaintiff and Angus McMurchy, K.C., for the defendant.

Examiner Special.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, OCT. 26.—In an explosion on the gun boat "Liberte," seventy officers and men were killed and seriously wounded.

RETURNED FROM HUNT

Mr. Thomas G. Robinson, corner of Simcoe and Bethune streets, and Mr. T. H. Cook of the Peterborough Lock Works, returned on Saturday night last after a very successful hunting trip near Gooderham on the I. R. and O. Both gentlemen were delighted with their success. They succeeded in shooting six rabbits, three ducks, and thirty-three partridges. They were only away four days and as it took a day to go and a day to come, they were hunting only two days. They report the game as being very plentiful in that part of the country.

BALLOON WAS SEEN

MONTREAL, OCT. 26.—The Star has received a wire from St. Hyacinthe, forty miles south east of here, that the balloon carrying red and green lights, like the America, was seen there Friday night.

Is the missing balloon, "America" up north of Fort William? Or is it near Lake St. John, Quebec, far north of Quebec City? Stories came in from both of these districts this morning, telling of people who were sure that the America, with its intrepid sailors, was seen in the neighbourhood recently. Of the two stories the Aero Club officials here, are more inclined to credit that from Quebec. In any case it is agreed that there is scant hope for the salvation of the aeronauts.

HURRIED CALL

The firemen received a hurried call at 10.15 this morning to Mr. John Grady's bake shop, 122 Park street. The alarm was sent in from box 14. It was a false alarm, however, as there was a back draft which caused the smoke to come out into the room. The doors were all shut and the smoke began to come out of the cracks, and some person saw it and sent in the alarm, believing the building to be on fire. The brigade responded promptly and were back at the fire station at 10.40.

WELL EQUIPPED

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, OCT. 26.—This morning news from the wilds of New Ontario brought no definite word of the missing balloon America and its intrepid aeronauts, Hawley and Post. While Fort William reports a story that it was seen going north there, little hope is expressed of finding it in that direction. It is learned that they were equipped with Arctic clothing, fishing tackle, rifles and so on. This might keep them alive for some time in the depths of the Canadian wilderness. Prof. Beck, of the Geological Department, Ottawa, who knows the north country thoroughly, takes gloomy views of things, and fears the men are dead. New York enthusiasts, however, offered rewards aggregating five thousand dollars for the rescue of Post and Hawley.

EDWARD JARDINE PLACED UNDER ARREST FOLLOWING JURY'S VERDICT IN INQUEST

Thos. Jardine, Brother of Edward, will be Held as Material Witness---Edward Jardine Denied Statements of Reputable Witnesses---Conclusion of Notable Hearing.

Special to The Examiner.

GODERICH, OCTOBER 26.—The Lizzie Anderson inquest concluded at noon today and in summing up, Coroner Holmes said to the jury: "If you feel that the evidence is conclusive that Ed. Jardine is connected in any way with her death, it is your duty to say so. If you believe Edward is culpable I don't see how you can get away from the statement that Thos. Jardine is interested also. They are two brothers who slept together and, apparently, hung up their fortunes together." Edward Jardine was again in the witness box this morning, and was under examination by Crown Prosecutor Blackstock. He contradicted himself in many particulars and also characterized reputable witnesses as liars, because they did not agree with him. He denied ownership of a knife found near the scene of the murder. Another witness said it looked like Jardine's.

A Later Despatch.

Edward Jardine is in the custody of the police and his brother, Thomas, is detained as a material witness, following the verdict of the Coroner's Jury in the Lizzie Anderson case, brought in this afternoon, which is as follows:

"We find that Elizabeth Jane Anderson came to her death on the night of September 20th, by having her throat cut by means of some instrument, and that the evidence points strongly to Edward Jardine, as having committed the crime."

STUTTERING AND STAMMERING CURED

Dr. Rivenburg, the Well Known Proprietor of the Institute for Stuttering, in the City

It is seldom that Peterborough is favoured with a personal visit by as thorough a master of the treatment of all form of speech impediment as the occasion of the visit of Dr. E. L. Rivenburgh who will be at the Oriental Hotel, Peterborough, for the next two weeks. Dr. Rivenburgh has made a specialty of speech impediment, and has a successful experience of over forty years. Read the following testimonial:

Toronto, Ont., March 5, 1910.

This is to certify that I have been a very bad stammerer for the past 40 years, at times so bad that I could scarcely utter a word, and as a consequence, I was seriously handicapped in life. I had been under treatment several times, but with little or no success, and had become very skeptical about ever finding a cure. I was, however, a short time ago induced to give Dr. Rivenburgh's method a trial and I am not sorry that I did so, for in a very short time, under his instructions, I found that I could talk and read easily and fluently, and life began to look brighter. I firmly believe that any one, no matter how badly afflicted, may be cured in a very short time if they will follow the doctor's instructions, which are practical and easy to acquire.

I would heartily recommend anyone afflicted to give Dr. Rivenburgh's methods trial.

RICHARD AMOS,
Woodstock, Ont.

Any one who stutters or stammers, or has an impediment in his speech, is asked to see Dr. Rivenburgh at the Oriental Hotel during the next two weeks.

A CLEVER WINDOW

A window that is attracting considerable attention just now is one at the Best Stove Company, exploiting the merits of the famous Happy Thought range. The scheme was a "happy thought" on the part of the firm, as the window is of a nature calculated to cause much interest in the display. The window is staged as a kitchen. A Happy Thought range with a kettle steaming cheerily is on one side. On the other a man is comfortably enjoying a meal, while a card on the wall indicates his complete satisfaction in the Happy Thought range. The idea is very cleverly carried out and few people pass without a look at the window.

BEWARE BEGINNINGS.

Ethel Le Neve, who was the companion of Crippen in his flight from justice, has been acquitted of the charge of complicity in the murder of Crippen's wife. She can well congratulate herself; for if she had not a guilty after knowledge of the crime, she was the motive of it; since it is apparent that to get possession of Le Neve, Crippen put his wife out of the way. She is guilty of practical complicity before the fact, and for this there was no excuse. No girl deserves much pity who, open-eyed, enters upon a course of sin, and then reaps the harvest of sin. Any girl who reaches the age of judgment, knows that in giving the least encouragement to a man, known to be married, she is doing wrong—not only in the way of indiscretion, but that she is entering upon a course of vice, because coming a party to a breach of the seventh commandment. Sympathy may go out to an innocent girl betrayed by sugared promises implying wifehood; but any girl that encourages and accepts the attentions of a married man, takes the first step in depravity and ruin. She can expect nothing from such a relation but a life of vice and social ostracism. The only safety is to resist beginnings. While the unmarried libertine is to avoided, his character in this respect may be easily concealed; but the unspeakable monster, the married libertine, bears in his social estate the danger flag which no girl who wishes to do so, need ignore. Beware beginnings, is a safe rule.

PRICES AND CROPS.

During the past week the ruling price of live hogs was $7.85; five years ago the past week the price was $6.00, and five years previously the same date, the price was also $6.00. The ruling price of wheat the past week was 90c., in the same period in 1909, the price was $1.06; in 1905, it was 77c, and in 1901, it was 70c. In the past week the price of cheese was 11 7-8 cents; the corresponding week, four years ago, the price was 11 3-4 cents, and in 1901, the figure was 10 1-2 cents. The ruling price of butter the past week was 23 1-2 to 25 cents; in 1906, it was 22 to 24 cents, and in 1891, it was 18 cents to 22 cents. The ruling price of eggs last week was 27c; in the corresponding week of 1905 it was 20 cents, and in 1901 it was 22 cents. Therefore, in the matter of prices, the farmers' position is generally a good advance on any of the past ten years in all the commodities mentioned. The last issue of the Census and Statistics Monthly states that in eastern Canada the crops all round are this year nearly as good, in quantity and quality, as last year, and better than those of two years ago. But, while the prices, all round, are somewhat less than those of a year and two years ago, they are much better than they were five or ten years ago. So that, with a fairly good crop and good prices, the farmers can be congratulated, and through them, the whole community, for the prosperity of the foundation industry of the country is, almost directly, the measure of the prosperity of the whole country, financially, industrially and generally. And still there is room for improvement, according to agricultural experts. They tell us that the farms of Canada are not yielding more than up to half of the possible productive capacity. If we could double our crops, we should, with the doubled prosperity of the farmer, double the general prosperity of Canada.

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

A MATTER FOR CONSIDERATION.

The question of reciprocity of trade with the United States is not one that suggests solution by extremists—either by those who favour reciprocity whether or no, or by those who reject the idea with similar impetuosity. The idea is one that deserves consideration and deep and thorough consideration before it is rejected or adopted. Mr. B. Osler, M.P., speaking to a meeting of ward six Conservatives in Toronto, is reported as saying:

"But for the life of me I cannot see how we can afford to go into reciprocity with the United States unless we are prepared to look squarely in the face the question of political union with that country."

This is an extreme position to take. We had reciprocity once upon a time; it was regarded, under the conditions then obtaining, as a benefit to Canadian trade. It did not lead to political union; for the United States, which is supposed to cast, or to have cast, covetuous eyes upon Canada—to desire the absorption of Canada — of their own notion, brought about the suspension of the reciprocity arrangement with Canada, thus voluntarily surrendering Mr. Osler's certain means of absorbing this country. The United States, a friendly power, our nearest neighbour, and, geographically, our natural market, has come, humbly enough, to Canada, asking us to consider the question of reciprocal trade. Can we afford to do less than enter upon negotiations, which, per se, commit us to nothing? If, in the course of these negotiations and as a result of the investigations that must, in justice to ourselves, be made, it is found that a fair treaty, advantageous to this country, can be arranged, then Canada will be benefitted to that extent. To pronounce or denounce reciprocity offhand is something that cannot be logically done. Consideration and investigation are necessary to a decision one way or the other.

A BETTER DAY DAWNING.

The splendid action of Mr. Eugene O'Keefe, of Toronto, in endowing, in the interests of Roman Catholic education, St. Augustine's Seminary, is only another instance of a man recognizing the responsibility that attaches to the possession of wealth—of his heart settling into the right place. No man amasses money without the help of the community, and this fact establishes a responsibility which is becoming largely acknowledged. Men of means are setting a splendid example in this regard; and even the possession of moderate means is influenced. We have examples in our own city, where liberal response has been made in the support of worthy objects. We had at the Baptist Convention in Toronto recently a remarkable outpouring of wealth for the advancement of the cause of missions. It is also noteworthy that within the past two or three years the laymen of all the churches in Canada have increased their financial support of missions, by about thirty per cent. There are these and other evidences and in all directions, of the fact that, while the present age is a money-getting age, it is also becoming a money-giving age. This is not only gratifying in respect of the great potentialities for good that consist with the judiciously liberal distribution of money, but in respect of the evidence it affords that Canada is escaping one of the dangers of prosperity and national progress—the domination of the spirit of commercialism—men money-winning for money's sake, irrespective of its noble use. There would be less envy of wealth and the wealthy, less unrest, less conspiracy against the social and moral order, if wealth discharged its trustee-ship with more general and fuller recognition of responsibility. Wealth is power, a power that can be made an instrument of injustice and degregation, or an instrument of social, intellectual and moral uplift. A better day is dawning.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The saving of the Soo was the making of the Soo—into one of the greatest industrial centres on the continent. It is a monument to long sighted statesmanship, brought into play at the critical moment.

The quick of the bilingual school question is touched by the reply of a French Canadian in Essex to the enquiry as to his wish respecting his children learning English: "Certainly we do. How else can they make their way in the world?"

The Nature And Function Of Bilingual Schools Defined

(Ottawa Free Press)

A prominent educationist, a gentleman who has studied and taught in the various schools, from elementary to the university and is in every way competent to express an opinion, was asked by The Free Press to explain the term "bilingual schools," and why they have become the object of such severe criticism at the hands of Bishop Fallon. In response he drew up the following memorandum, a careful study of which will give an intelligent idea of the important discussion which is now on in regard to the attitude of the Bishop of London:

The term "bilingual schools" is the source of endless confusion. Certain journals seem to think the opposition to bilingual schools such as actually exist in parts of Ontario, involves opposition to bilingualism. This is absurd. Bilingualism is a good and desirable thing. Multilingualism would be much better.

Bishop Fallon, speaking of the bilingual schools of his diocese says:

"In the schools that are inflicted on these children neither English nor French in properly taught nor decently spoken. The regulations of the education Department are in many instances utterly disregarded, and because of the conditions that obtain children are either not sent to school at all or are withdrawn in face of the difficulties."

Can such a condition promote bilingualism?

But the term "bilingual schools" is so elastic that it covers various classes of schools entirely distinct.

(1) Those schools in which there are French-speaking and English-speaking pupils. These schools have in many cases been built and maintained by English-speaking people, Catholic or Protestant or both. Some French families come into the section and at once an agitation is started for a bilingual teacher. Now a bilingual teacher is rarely a properly qualified teacher. How many teachers on the staff of the Ottawa public schools or on the staff of the public schools of Toronto could undertake to teach even a rural bilingual?

The bilingual teacher is qualified in some sort of a way for the emergency, and is, often, for lack of training, incapable of teaching French or English or anything else.

So if the claims of the advocates of bilingual teaching are conceded, at unqualified and incapable teacher is forced on the English-speaking people of the section. Is this then a purely French question? In many places farmers have sold their farms and moved elsewhere solely for school considerations. Their places are taken by French-Canadians.

(2) Then there are schools such as exist in Ottawa and some of the eastern counties of Ontario, in which little or no English is taught or spoken. These French schools are carried on under the name of bilingual schools, but the pupils do not acquire a knowledge of English. That English is not satisfactorily taught in such schools is evident from the fact that about 25 per cent. of the pupils enrolled in the English separate schools of Ottawa are children of French parents. This proportion would be much larger if all the French pupils who apply for admission to the English schools could be accepted for the grade corresponding to that in which they were in the French schools. The principals of the English schools find themselves obliged to place them in the lowest classes because of their total lack of knowledge of English. The French schools are those who entered at at early age in the lower classes.

(3) There is still another class of schools that have been recently put into the category of bilingual schools. These are schools that have always been English schools, but, because of a certain number of the pupils being of French origin ,though speaking the English language, they have been classed as bilingual and given to the bilingual inspectors. Instances of this class are Vankeek Hill, Pembroke and the proposed change in Windsor against which Bishop Fallon so strongly protests.

With minds cleared of hazy notions concerning bilingual schools, and with a clear perception of the difficult and in some cases intolerable conditions they impose on English and many French ratepayers, it will be easy to see how baseless and absurd is the charge that those who oppose bilingual schools are opposed to the French-Canadian people or their language.

If the Department of Education deems such schools necessary or desirable, let such legislation be passed as will give them a distinct and separate status, and let those who desire to have them support them; but at least relieve the English-speaking ratepayers and as now administered, people who desire their children taught English of both public and separate schools of the intolerable incubus of the bilingual school system.

BREAKING UP THE LAND MONOPOLY.

(London Advertiser.)

An unusual number of large estates have been offered for sale recently in Great Britain. Some of the vendors, of the Unionist persuasion, are not disinclined to make party capital by ascribing their sales to the exactions of the budget, although that famous measure exempted agriculture from new burdens. It stiffens the taxation on idle land in town and country, but the supertax on incomes of over $25,000 is the only way in which it can reach the owner of land under cultivation. Partisan alarmists have been discomfited by this letter in the London Times from Lord De La Warr, a Unionist peer, the owner of 23,000 acres:

"The new land taxes do not affect agricultural land, and it has not even been suggested that any further burdens are to be imposed upon agriculturists, therefore sales of agricultural estates cannot be directly attributed to any action on the part of the Government. My chief reason for selling now, and I imagine other land owners have been and are being actuated by the same reason, is that owing to improved agricultural prospects in this country the demand for farms has increased, causing a natural rise in the price of land, and there is now an opportunity, perhaps, of selling which has not existed hitherto, at any rate for many years. Personally I have contemplated selling my farms for some time past. I have always been in favour of a man owning his farm; from every point of view it is better that he should do so."

The small holdings act, which has made it possible for men of small means to acquire farms, and the example of Irish legislation, have undoubtedly stimulated a demand for land in England. The unlocking of the soil and breaking-up of the great estates, though displeasing to the bulk of the landed nobility and their satellites, are among the most hopeful signs in modern England. Far-sighted Conservatives should welcome a movement which tends to the diffusion of property. Lord De La Warr sees this clearly enough.

REVENUE LEAPS.

(Montreal Herald)

The revenue statement of Great Britain for the half-year ending September 30 is of exceptional interest, not only by reason of the magnitude of the figures with which it deals, but as indicating the convulsive financial tremors through which the country has passed. The total receipts for th esi xmonths were $198,000,000, an increase of $195,000,000 as compared with the corresponding half of the year 1909. The huge increase is largely due to the fact that the bulk of the income tax for 1909-10 has been got in since the 31st of March last. That impost yielded $151,000,000 in the last six months as against $25,000,000 in the corresponding six months. It seems that $250,000,000 of the sum was got in the June quarter. During the whole of the year 1909-10 the income tax produced only $65,000,000; this, of course, because the Budget was held up by the Lords; an impartial consideration of the figures indicates that the new taxes provided for in Mr. Lloyd-George's Budget are bringing in quite as large a revenue as the Chancellor of the Exchequer anticipated. Some are actually producing more than was expected of them.

CRUISERS, NOT DREADNOUGHTS

(Manitoba Free Press)

An open letter addressed by Lord Charles Beresford to Mr. Asquith is published in the British papers, in which the doughty Lord Charles points out that in the event of war British trade on the high seas would be exposed to the attacks of privateers on all the trade routes, with the immediate results of (1) a sharp rise in the rates of insurance, (2) a sharp rise in the prices of raw materials and the necessaries of life, (3) the refusal of shipowners to allow their vessels to leave port, and (4) a heavy fall in the price of securities.

Lord Charles bases his warning upon the increased risk of the use of privateers, due to recent developments in what we may call the trend of international opinion as regards naval warfare. Privateers will not bear that appellation. They will be called commercial vessels, taken over by Governments for combative purposes. But though the name will be different, the thing will be the same. Lord Charles' remedy is the provision of a greatly increased number of cruisers of a light type. Cruisers, not Dreadnoughts, is what Admiral Charles Beresford calls out for.

A Treatment That Costs Nothing if it Fails

We want you to try three large bottles of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic on our personal guarantee that the trial will not cost you a penny if it does not give you absolute satisfaction. That's proof of our faith in this remedy, and it should indisputably demonstrate that we know what we are talking about when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair on bald heads, except where baldness has been of such long duration that the roots of the hair are entirely dead, the follicles closed and grown over, and the scalp is glazed.

Remember, we are basing our statements upon what has already been accomplished by the use of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, and we have the right to assume that what it has done for thousands of others it will do for you. In any event you cannot lose anything by giving it a trial on our liberal guarantee. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

WHAT DOES make the young girls of to-day wrinkle up their foreheads so?

Is it a twentieth century germ?

If you haven't noticed how prevalent that trick is among young women in their twenties and even younger girls, just take especial notice of the girls you meet for the next day or two, or maybe the young lady who looks out of your mirror at you, and I think you will.

"Wrinkles," says the epigram-maker, "are the fret-work of disposition." That is usually pretty true, but I think those horizontal forehead wrinkles, which such an astonishing number of the younger generation are acquiring, are an exception. For they seem to be more a result of a nervous trick of lifting the eyebrows when talking or smiling or looking upwards, than of worry.

It seems to me that the forehead is a part of the face which should express repose, and yet I constantly see girls who can hardly speak or smile without sending their eyebrows racing up to their pompadours, and transforming what should be a smooth, pretty expanse of forehead, into an imitation of a ploughed field.

But, unpleasant as the trick itself is, of course the immediate effect isn't a patch on the results—three or four permanent wrinkles. At first they are almost imperceptible, but they gradually grow deeper, until they permanently mar a part of the face, which, if it is smooth and of a pretty shape, may be one of a woman's most distinctive though least obtrusive charms.

Quite the most alarming thing about this strangely prevalent habit is its victims' entire unconsciousness of it.

Just as like as not, you, dear lady, who are reading this and saying that you think I am very much overstating the case and that you don't know anyone who has the habit, are a victim yourself.

When you go to bed to-night, suppose you take your hand glass and carefully scrutinize your forehead, and if you find any signs of wrinkles ask some friend to watch and see if you are etching them in this way.

A masseuse, who says that nearly half her patients are getting for themselves an absurdly early crop of wrinkles in this manner, gives them three rules to overcome the habit and undo any harm already done.

Maybe they may appeal to you if that hand-mirror fury finds you guilty.

When you are smiling or talking or laughing, occasionally pass your hand over your forehead to see if it is smooth.

Ask some friend who is with you much, to reprove you every time she sees you wrinkle your forehead.

If you have any wrinkle lines already formed, get a reliable skin food—be sure that it is one warranted not to grow hair—and massage the forehead every night or two. The proper way to do this is to place the finger tips together on your forehead, just above where the eyebrows meet, and slowly and very firmly draw the hands outward across the forehead.

EXCELLENT ADDRESS BY MR. C. C. JAMES TO YOUNG MEN OF ST. PAUL'S

Large Number Heard the Deputy Minister of Agriculture Last Night.

SPLENDID BANQUET

The banquet, which was held under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Paul's church in the schoolroom of that church last night, was a success from beginning to end. The speech on "The Relation of City Life to the Agricultural Interests," by Mr C. C. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, was the feature of the evening. But too much credit cannot be given to the ladies of the St. Paul's congregation for the sumptuous supper which they had prepared, and for the pains which they had taken in doing so. A large crowd congregated at the church for the purpose of enjoying what proved to be a very enjoyable evening. Mr. A. P. McLean presided.

At the close of the banquet, a toast to the King was tendered, which was followed by a song by Mr. McIlroy, which was duly appreciated and applauded. The chairman then made a short speech. This was followed by a toast to "Our Agricultural Interests" proposed by Mr. J. H. Garbutt. It was responded to by Mr. C. C. James in a speech which was greatly appreciated by all.

A solo was beautifully rendered by Miss Davies, after which a quartette, composed of Messrs Crane, R. Mein, Nelson, and H. T. Gillespie, gave a very acceptable rendition.

Mr. James commenced his speech by saying that the high cost of living was not evidenced or shown by the sumptuous supper which was provided at the low price of twenty-five cents. But he said that it was not like that all over. The people in Toronto were wondering when the farmer was going to cease raising the prices of the produce. That is a question which the people of the present day are up against. "There are a great many questions of the present day," said Mr James. "For instance, we hear people ask if Crippen is really guilty or who will win the championship in the ball games—all great national questions, but the more we listen to the variety of questions asked by the people the more confused we become. When I was coming down here on the train I heard a conversation between two gentlemen concerning the possibilities of farming in Western Canada. They were of the opinion that the Canadian West was the only part of the country that had any great possibilities and regarded it as the Empire's granary for all time to come. I was anxious to ask what they thought of Ontario's possibilities, or if they had ever waited to consider them, but did not get the chance. Regarding the interest the men, both young and old, have in the agricultural interests of our country, I may say that the deep interest which they have, is evidenced by the fact that they have come here to-night and miss other amusements to listen to such a speech as I am now making. These agricultural questions which confront us are not only national questions, but questions which have an individual importance to each one of us. Speaking of the development of Ontario and of northern parts of Canada, the people are just beginning to find their way into the north, and to realize its possibilities, and the people of Ontario should get wise to the fact that the soil in their province, although it has been under operation for years, is undeveloped. The drainage problem solves this puzzle. The farmers do not pay attention to the draining of the land. By simply laying a few tile, untold good is done the farmers, resources are extended because that land, which was previously waste, has been transformed into good, fertile, arable land. To-day, if all the land in Ontario, which is in need of draining, was properly drained, the financial increase would be a half. This problem is worth the consideration of the pupils at large. At present it would take one hundred years to drain the country as it should be, therefore the people say, that there is no use our bothering with it. But, it is worth doing for the sake of the welfare of the nation. The "Good Roads" problem would be solved if the drainage was done, simply because the farmers' financial increase would enable him to pay for the upbuilding of the roads.

Again, there is the question of high-class seeds. The farmers get conceited and think that they have the best seeds an dthat is just where they make the mistake. A great deal of successful farming lies in the seeds. Farmers think that if a field produces 25 or 30 bushels of wheat to the acre that it is pretty good. We have heard that 45 and 50 bushels to the acre have been produced, but I saw a field of one hundred acres produce seventy bushels to the acre. The quality of seed is like the quality of horses, one grade is far superior to the other, therefore the foregoing illustrations of the different amounts of grain produced to the acre, will give you some idea what a difference the seeds make, and the importance of choosing good seeds.

"Then there is the animal world to consider. Go through Europe, every horse, sheep and cow is of high grade, no poor low breeds are to be found. Contrast this with the condition of affairs in Canada. Of course we have a lot of fine horses, cattle, sheep, and such like, but, on the other hand, we have a lot of very poor samples of these animals. Let us do something to raise the standard. Good horses of high-priced grades and beef, the same, are scarce all over Canada, and it is of great importance that the class should be raised to a higher standard.

"Next thing to be considered is the fruit growing. Is there in the whole province of Ontario, anything which receives as little attention as a farmer's orchard? It is safe to say that nearly every farm in Ontario has an orchard of some size thereon, and everywhere it is neglected. An orchard is something that should be kept in good shape and looked after. Look at the price of apples. First-class apples are a rarity. We, city folk, cannot buy them at a reasonable rate. Men, who are interested in the fruit growing business, have taken orchards, and worked them to a better shape, and looked after them, and in two years had them producing three and four hundred dollars worth of fruit more than they had produced on previous occasions. If the orchards were given the care in all Canada that is due them, city people would not have to pay the price that we have to at the present time.

"If these things were observed the farmer would get rich and this would mean a benefit to all men in business. It would enable the farmer to buy better machinery, thereby giving the manufacturer a chance. The farmer would buy every kind of material that he needed and in every case some person would be benefitted by the improvements. Now, the question is, is it worth our while to take hold of things and put these suggestions into effect. Did any other country do it? Yes! Denmark is an example of a country which has improved her industries by doing the necessary improvements. There are no poor people in Denmark simply because the wealth is divided up. Of course there is no very rich people due to the same fact. Every man is independent. The farmer was the first man to do business in the world and he will be the last man to go out of business. If any person starves it will not be the farmer. We should see that the farmer is developing the soil properly, as it is a matter that concerns us each and every one, and concerns the city men in particular. In closing, I will say that we should do all we possibly can towards the developing of our country and in doing so we will develop into a more loyal people."

At the close of Mr. James' speech the following toasts were given:

"Our Guests," proposed by Mr. Cowan, responded to by Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners, also by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, representing the Board of Trade.

To the "Sister Organization," proposed by Mr. J. H. Connal, responded to by Mr. W. M. Langford.

A vote of thanks to the speaker, moved by the Rev. Mr. Pogue, seconded by Mr. Downie, and a vote of thanks to the ladies by Mr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. Rosecrough, were carried.

Mr. James then responded to the vote of thanks which had been tendered to him, and what proved to be a very profitable and enjoyable evening was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

Unlucky Woman Gets Husbands Who End By Shooting Themselves

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—"Ike" Van Zandt, then a professional baseball player, nine years ago married Annie Mahoney. Their best man was Clarence McGuire. Five years afterward Van Zandt went out one evening and in a half hour returned with a young woman. He introduced her to his wife. Then, holding his baby girl in his lap, he told his wife he loved the other woman.

Mrs. Van Zandt, without making an outcry, sent the intruder away and then tried to win back the entire love of her husband—for he had said he still loved her, despite the stronger affection for the other woman.

Within a few weeks, when he realized how sorely he had wounded his wife's heart, Van Zandt killed himself. About a year afterward McGuire began to court the widow. They were married and went to Jersey City to live. For a time they were happy.

LOVE AND LIFE LOST AGAIN

But yesterday morning, shortly after 1 o'clock, the second husband killed himself. Only the day before, like the first husband, he had confessed that he loved another woman, but he added that she did not know he had a wife and a step-daughter. This sweetheart was Miss Anna Appel, of No. 1956 Third avenue, Manhattan.

Several months ago McGuire became restless and left his wife. Mrs. McGuire put her furniture in storage and went to work, leaving her little girl at a day nursery, while she was away from home. McGuire, who was a painter, took a room in a house adjoining the house in which Miss Appel lives. It was his custom to see her every night. It did not take long for him to win Miss Appel's love and she consented to be married to him.

While all this was going on Mrs. McGuire was saving what she could on her earnings. A week ago she had money enough to pay in advance month's rent at No. 123 West One Hundred and Thirtieth street. Then she sent for her husband and asked him to return to her. He said he would. She told him that while she was free of debt and had the rent paid he would have to go to work and supply the money for household expenses. He promised, worked for two days and brought home $7, which he gave her.

PROMISED TO GIVE UP GIRL

But that night he told her that he loved another woman. Mrs. McGuire was heartbroken. McGuire tried to comfort her and said he would give up the girl, whose name he had not revealed.

He had not given up his room in Third avenue and on Friday night he called on Miss Appel. He always went to the roof or her home and crossed thence to the roof of his own house. As he was departing Miss Appel went to the roof with him. There he told her he had a letter for her, but would mail it. Then he took he she was saying good-bye forever.

Miss Appel went down into the house and McGuire blew out his brains. Miss Appel heard the shot and ran up. Her brother found her holding McGuire's head in her lap. A letter in McGuire's pocket said he did not want to live because "his mother had disgraced him." Charles McGuire, his brother, said Clarence's reference to their mother was a deliberate lie; that their mother all her life had made sacrifices for Clarence and he had always caused her trouble.

NO KIDNEY-BACKACHE AFTER A FEW DOSES

Kidneys Act Fine and Backache or Urinary Misery Vanishes

Usually sufferers from backache, bladder trouble or out-of-order kidneys are relieved after several doses of Pape's Diuretic.

The time to cure kidney trouble is while it is only a trouble — before it settles into Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes or Bright's Disease.

The moment you suspect any kidney or urinary derangement, or feel a constant, dull backache, or notice that the urine is thick, cloudy, offensive or full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, you should begin taking Pape's Diuretic as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other remedy at any price, made anywhere else in the world, which will effect so thorough and prompt a cure.

Pape's Diuretic acts directly upon the kidneys, bladder and urinary system; cleanses, heals, vitalizes and regulates these organs, ducts and glands and completes the cure within a few days.

Misery in the back, sides or loins, sick headache, inflamed or puffy eyelids, nervousness, rheumatism and darting pains, heart palpitations, prostatic trouble, bilious stomach, dizziness, sleeplessness, listless, worn-out feeling and other symptoms caused by inactive, sluggish kidneys, simply vanish. Uncontrollable urination (especially at night), smarting, discoloured water and all bladder misery ends.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will vouch for the responsibility of Pape Thompson & Pape of Cincinnati, Ohio, who prepare Pape's Diuretic — 50 cent treatment—sold by every druggist in the world.

HARRY ADAMS

KNIFE PLAY FOLLOWS TRIVIAL QUARREL

NORTH TONAWANDA, Oct. 21—Joseph Toman, 36 years old, lies at his home at 8 Eighth avenue in a critical condition as the result of a murderous assault, alleged to have been perpetuated by his brother-in-law, Joseph Lectshac, who lived with his sister and her husband. Lectshac is now locked up in a cell at the North Tonawanda police headquarters on an open charge pending the outcome of his brother-in-law's injuries.

The men were uptown together Saturday night drinking and had just reached the house when they became involved in a quarrel over trifling family affairs. Letshac is said to have pulled a knife and begun slashing Toman about the head, face and neck. Six times Toman was stabbed before he sank to the floor with blood flowing from the wounds.

Mrs. Toman entered the room just in time to see her husband sink to the floor. She ran screaming from the house. Neighbors called the police and Coroner A. J. Martin hastened to the scene of the accident to the scene of the accident to secure an ante-mortem statement. Dr. Martin also dressed the man's wounds. Patrolman Seguin was on the scene so quickly that Lectshac had no chance to escape.

The worst wound was found in Toman's neck. The blade of the knife barely escaped the jugular vein. The point of the knife sank into the neck so deeply that the trachea was penetrated. Four of the slashes were in the left cheek and another gash extended across the top of the head, laying the scalp open for several inches.

UNIQUE SERVICE CONDUCTED BY REV. J. G. POTTER IN MONTREAL

The following from the Montreal Witness will be read with interest by Mr. Potter's many friends in Peterborough:

A unique service was held in MacVicar Memorial church last night. The whole service was arranged in the interests of the work contemplated for the blind of this city.

The Scriptures were read by a blind man, the organ voluntary was played by a blind man, and hymns composed by blind authors, such as the Rev. George Mathieson, the blind preacher in Edinburgh, and Fanny Crosby, helped to make the service of great interest. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the large congregation became interested in the appeal made to them on behalf of the association for the blind. It was Mr. Flynn who read by the Braile system, the ninth chapter of John, and Mr. P. T. Layton assisted the church organist by playing all the voluntaries.

The Rev. J. G. Potter, pastor of the congregation, based his remarks upon John ix., 3, "Jesus answered, neither this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

The preacher gave statistics showing that blindness was more prevalent than many supposed. It has been said that one out of every thousand is blind. In Great Britain alone there are over thirty thousand. In the United States, by a comparatively recent census, 50,500 are said to be blind. In Canada they were sufficiently numerous to call for something being done on their behalf. There were institutes at Brantford and Halifax and one for the French blind in Montreal. The first institution for the care of the blind was founded by Wolf VI., in 1878, the second in Paris in 1260. The first for employment of adult blind was opened in Edinburgh, by Dr. Johnston, in 1793. In 1873 there were 148 institutions in the world. The first institution to attempt the education of the blind was in Paris, in 1784, and the first in the United States was the Perkins Institute in Boston, Mass.

In recent years the Americans have organized various associations for the blind, and it is very interesting to note that one of these groups organized in 1871 reports a magnificent work accomplished.

The census of graduates of the institutes under their direction shows that 16 became superintendents of other institutes, 214 became teachers, 34 ministers of the gospel, 84 authors, publishers and lecturers; 310 were engaged as teachers of music or vocalists, 99 organists of churches, 126 piano tuners, 937 teachers, employees and workers in handicraft, 277 storekeepers, 45 owners and agents of real estate, 760, mostly women employed at house work, sewing and helping in families, 78 working in homes for the blind. The work that the blind could be trained to do was very varied, and in business and professional life they have been eminently successful, and in some cases distinguished. Take, for example, the Rev. Dr. George Mathieson, of Edinburgh; Fanny Crosby, the hymn writer; Ghosn-el-Howie, Helen Keller, the modern marvel, who wrote in a letter received the other day: "Idleness is the greatest curse the blind endure."

Senator Gaw, the brilliant member of the American Congress; Sir Henry Fawcett, the Postmaster-General of England; Herreshoff, the designer of ships that have given Sir Thomas Lipton no end of trouble to compete with; Pulitzer, the talented editor of the New York "World"; Alfred Hollins, the famous organist of Free Church, Edinburgh, Scotland, and Wolstenholme, the greatest musician in all Britain.

Mr. Potter appealed to his congregation with much earnestness to assist the association in the splendid enterprise they have undertaken, for there was no limit to the possibilities in the work of educating and training the blind to become most serviceable citizens in many lines of life.

Aviation.

There are about 800 aeroplanes in France, 700 of which have been made in the last ten months.

In the province of Brandenburg, Germany, there is a scale of fines for aviators flying over towns and villages, the maximum fine being $15. Fines are not imposed, however, on steerable balloons.

An interesting feature in the patent development of the year in Great Britain was the number of applications filed in the field of aeronautics, being more than three times the number filed during the preceding year.

Spiced Pears.

To seven pounds of fruit, one quart of vinegar, three pounds of sugar and a tablespoonful each of cloves and stick cinnamon. Put the fruit, sugar and spices in the jars in layers and let stand overnight. In the morning drain off the juice and let it boil up, then pour over the fruit. Repeat this process and on the third morning add vinegar to the syrup and when boiling turn in the fruit and cook until the pears are transparent and can be pierced with a fork.

Oatmeal Cookies.

Sift a quart of flour twice with a teaspoonful of salt and one of baking soda and stir into it three cups of dry oatmeal. When the meal and flour are thoroughly mixed add a cupful of melted butter and two cupfuls of powdered sugar. An Impossible Story.

A certain king once made a proclamation that he would give a golden half to any one of his subjects who would tell him the most wonderful story, but it must be quite impossible for the story to be true or the prize would not be given.

From all parts of the kingdom people came to him with remarkable stories, but the king declared that it was not quite possible for one and all of them to be true, and the prize was not awarded.

At last there came an old man, followed by two servants bearing an immense jar between them.

"May it please your majesty," said the old man, "your most excellent father borrowed from my father this jar full of gold, promising that your majesty would pay the same amount back to me."

"Oh, that is absurd and impossible!" said the astonished king as he looked at the huge jar.

"Then if it is impossible," said the old man, "I have fairly won the golden ball, but if my story be true your majesty ought to pay your father's debt."

Thus the king was obliged to declare that the old man had won the prize.

HALSBURY EIGHTY-FIVE.

Great British Lawyer Is a Vigorous Old Man and Still Plays Golf.

Lord Halsbury, the great lawyer who was Lord Chancellor in the last Conservative Administration, celebrated his 85th birthday recently.

Most men who had been born twelve years before Queen Victoria's accession and ten years after Waterloo would be content to enjoy life from an armchair.

Not so Lord Halsbury. On fine days that extraordinary vigorous man follows a morning's work with four or five hours on the golf links.

His lordship is living at his cottage on the tip of the North Foreland.

A country clergyman or doctor would call the "cottage" a handsome house. But it is none the less a simple one, twenty yards from its open gate on the Broadstair road.

It is just the plain, comfortable place in which one would expect such a sturdy, ruddy-faced Englishman as Lord Halsbury to retreat from the sedentary chains of the lawyer and the town politician.

Not many of the Broadstairs folk seem to know they have Lord Halsbury for neighbor, and few know who lives at "North Foreland Cottage."

How healthy the spot is may be indicated by the direction how to find it given to me by a weather-beaten farm hand by the fields that stretch away to Margate.

"Keep to the road over the cliffs," he said, "and it's the first on the right next to the North Foreland Lighthouse." Only a dozen other tenants of the cliff and the operators in a small wireless station share the former Lord Chancellor's view of the sea.

A mile nearer Margate are the links of the North Foreland and Kingsgate Club. His lordship will drive to the clubhouse immediately after lunch, and if the sun is in the right humor, play and stroll till sundown.

He looks one of the old esymoned school of English—and he is. No motor-car for him. He prefers the company and the gait of his horse. The coachman drives him out and home at a pace that raises no cloud of dust for the holiday makers to consume, and gives Lord Halsbury time to admire the beauty of the green land and the blue waters.

Once he was among the masters of the foil and the duelling sword. His fencing gave him the strong and the sure wrist that have made him sound at the golf. He has helped his muscle, too, by pitching hay and long walks.

He believes that to his abstention from smoking he owes much to his vigor. In early Victorian days he learned to detest tobacco with quite an early Victorian detestation; and though he has more tolerance for the habit than he had half a century ago, nothing would induce him to try a cigar between his own lips.

Only eight months ago he returned to the Court of Appeal and gratified everybody by his youthful hustling and his short and lucid judgments.

And he is still working hard every day on his encyclopedic history of "The Laws of England," a monumental work whose editing he undertook when he retired from the Woolsack.

Twelve volumes have been published, and more than twelve have yet to appear. Lord Halsbury reads every article before it passes through the printer's hands, and the stamp of his personality runs through the whole work.

It has his own brevity of expression; his own clearness; and flashes of wit and play of humor that resemble his own.

To keep fit for his editing and his golf, Lord Halsbury gets to bed at half-past ten or eleven. He is up at eight, as brisk for five or six hours tough brain work and as eager for his afternoon on the links as most very young lawyers.

The Homeric Controversy.

It was about the year 1795 that the "Homeric controversy" began. About that date F. A. Wolf, in his Prolegomena, argued that the Homeric poems were composed of independent epic songs, collected and arranged by Pelsistratus about 550 B. C. Wolf's theory created a great stir among scholars and poets and inaugurated the fight which enlisted most of the learned men of the day. Mr. Andrew Lang, in "Homer and the Epic," 1893, vigorously defended the "one author" theory, as opposed to the idea of Wolf that the famous poems were composed through ages by many different persons.—New York American.

Keeping Brass Beds New.

"When purchasing a bed from a friend of mine, who is a manufacturer of iron and brass beds, I objected to the brass ones because they are so hard to keep bright," was the comment of a housekeeper recently.

"That is because you polish them," he answered quizzically. Then in all seriousness he said: "Take my advice and let brass absolutely alone, not handling it, not allowing it to be wet by any liquid and, above all, not rubbing it. Of course there are polishes which give luster, but it is only temporary, and the latter stage is worse than the first. Once begun, the polishing must be kept up. The absent treatment is what brass wants."

I took this expert's advice, and after five years my bed is still like new.

Just as you are pleased at finding faults you are displeased at finding perfection.—Lavater.

NAVY AND MATCHMAKING.

The Ships Will Be a Great Boon to Victoria's Social Circles.

There are more motors per capita in Victoria than in any other city in Canada. A great many tourists inflict themselves upon the city in summertime, and there is an Oriental quarter which is much more noticeable than Vancouver's. These are some of the facts. But let the world wait until Victoria has the new Canadian navy beside it. It will be happy then, in a dignified way, and all the marriageable young officers sons of Senatorial grocers and wine merchants and contractors, and honest Senatorial democrats generally, will be given an excellent opportunity, properly chaperoned and encouraged, to find life companions. There is only the Rainbow to start on, and it is not much, but it is a beginning for a "naval society," and Victoria is already drinking.

But, to be frank, it is a rare old place. Courteous, hospitable, and refined. Old colonels and majors and other "army people" are jogging along towards a philosophical end, in a fine old-wordly manner. They have their incomes, their family name, their children, and a bit of an investment somewhere or other; and they vote Tory fairly consistently, and tolerate Ottawa's crudeness testily.

It used to be called, when it was born fifty years ago, "Fort Comosam," a tentacle of the Hudson Bay people. There was a stockade then where now the Court House stands, and Indians and traders made the causeway lively. Remittance men drifted in, and, in fact, they are here still, and many a decent fellow there is among them, too. Nice, hopeless chaps, from the Canadian point of view; but, after all, enjoying life and cutting pretty figures—except when they're tipsy for the delectation of dancing masters and to the chagrin of the socially ambitious sons of self-made Canadians.

It was, they say, the first Pacific port to be visited by a steamship, and now the steamers call day and night. It is the first port on the inward trip, and the last on the outward bound. They manufacture very little in Victoria, except some good newspapers, and good wives for those who can provide a gentleman's income. The canning companies of the coast have their head offices there, and the sealing fleet rides at anchor nearby when not bent on business. Large lumber interests are directed from this centre, and many a good company has been floated by Victoria enterprise and Victorin capital.

A DISHONORABLE PRACTICE.

Roast For Ministers Who Do Not Treat Their Substitutes Fairly.

Those men who occupy the office of a Christian minister cannot afford to be anything but strictly honorable in all their dealings with all people, writes C. H. Wetherbe in The Canadian Baptist. For no kind of a consideration should they take undue advantage of those who come under their power. The people of the world have a right to expect in a professedly Christian minister an example of utmost integrity. But it must be confessed that some ministers indulge in certain practices which are lacking in honorableness. They do things which even a moral man, making no profession of piety, would never consent to do. A minister of much ability, and with considerable experience in supplying pulpits, relates in The Journal and Messenger, the following incident: "A minister of a large church is also a very popular lecturer. I understand that he clears about $7,000 a year from his lecture work, in addition to a substantial salary. His lecture duties take him away a great deal. He has often to get supplies. He is a real genius in getting them free. He has worked me several times. One time I broke into my vacation to aid him, and paid my own railroad fare. He has never given me a penny for my work yet. If I were to speak to him about it, he would say: 'Brother, don't be mercenary; don't hunger for the loaves, and don't angle for the fishes.'" Such a practice provokes a righteous man to anger. How utterly devoid of even ordinarily good morality that man is! He coldly repudiates his financial obligations to those who have aided him at the very times when he was getting large pay for his services. He shows that he loves money a great deal more than he loves ordinary morality. What a religious sham he is! That writer says that this minister "worked" him several times. Why did he allow the man to "work" him more than once? Verily, that man ought to "work" at something besides preaching.

Out West.

After recounting the hours of Sunday devotion a member of one of the adult schools who went west some time ago, relates his experience: "The rest of the week I start at 5.30 and finish at 8.30, one hour for dinner and breakfast. Adam has got a lot to answer for, I can tell you. Yet who can go astray engaged in such a manner. Work is very plentiful out here. My term at farming is nearly complete. I expect to go threshing shortly. Then into the lumber camps. For advice, become a farmer, not a farm laborer. Mosquitoes and black flies are here galore; my hands, face and neck have been all lumps, but they are having frost, and expect snow, and then my friends will depart, and in their stead we get wolves. Of course, we all have a chance sometime, good, bad and indifferent."

Wood for Matches.

It is not to be assumed that by reason of the smallness of matches the makers ever utilize scraps or bits of wood left over. The contrary is the case. Matches are not by-products. Any wood rejected by the match machine goes to the by-product destructionist, and of these by-product of the match business may be mentioned some, such as doors and sashes, that in some instances form an industry as important as the match industry itself.

Whoever sincerely endeavors to do all the good he can will probably do much more than he imagines or will ever know.—Miss Dowdall.

HIS TWO BAD DAYS.

Lord Byron Had a Positive Dread of Fridays and Sundays.

The belief in palmists and soothsayers is not, as is sometimes supposed, confined to the ignorant and the credulous. Lord Byron was not a skeptic in these matters. Just before his death, as recorded in "Byron—The Last Phase," by Richard Edgecumbe, "he said he had reflected a great deal on a prediction which had been made to him when a boy by a famed fortune teller in Scotland. His mother, who firmly believed in chiromancy and astrology, had sent for this person and desired him to inform her what would be the future destiny of her son. Having examined attentively the palm of his hand, the man looked at him for awhile steadfastly and then with a solemn voice exclaimed, 'Beware of your thirty-seventh year, my young lord, beware!' He had entered on his thirty-seventh year on Jan. 22, and it was evident from the emotion with which he related this circumstance that the caution of the palmist had produced a deep impression on his mind, which in many respects was so superstitious that we thought it proper to accuse him of superstition. 'To say the truth,' answered his lordship, 'I find it equally difficult to know what not to believe. * * * You will, I know, ridicule my belief in lucky and unlucky days, but no consideration can now induce me to undertake anything either on a Friday or a Sunday. I am positive it would terminate unfortunately. Every one of my misfortunes—and God knows I have had my share—has happened to be on one of those days.'"—London Gentlewoman.

FAMOUS SWORDS.

The Monster Weapon Used at Welsh Eisteddfods.

The largest sword of which there is any record is the seven foot ceremonial sword that was made for Edward III. and is now preserved in Westminster abbey. Next comes the "sword of ceremony" that is used at Welsh eisteddfods. This weapon if placed in the hands of a modern Godfrey de Bouillon, who, it will be recalled, with a two handed sword cleaved a Turk into halves from the shoulder to the hips, would be quite long enough for any one who wished to put it to practical use. It is six feet two inches in length.

Of gorgeous swords which are not so much weapons as settings for precious stones the most valuable in English is said to be the one presented by the Egyptians to Lord Wolseley and valued at $10,000. This sum is comparatively insignificant for a bejeweled sword if the value of the sword brought over to Europe some years ago by the then shah of Persia—namely, $50,000—be taken as a standard of what a diamond hilted weapon ought to cost. Competent authorities on the subject familiar with that famous weapon of the Persian ruler are rather skeptical as to the existence of the gackwar of Baroda's gorgeous blade, which is supposed to be worth more than twenty swords of equal beauty and value to the shah's, but it is popularly supposed that the diamonds, rubies and emeralds with which it is thickly incrusted bring up its value to about $1,000,000.—Exchange.

How Thackeray Worked.

If ecarte is to be held responsible for Thackeray's appearance as an author, his erratic methods of work contributed equally to his early death. He wrote invariably with the printer's devil in attendance.

"I can conceive nothing more harassing in the literary way," wrote Motley to his wife in 1858, "than Thackeray's way of living from hand to mouth. I mean in regard to the way he furnishes food to the printer's devil. Here he is just finishing the number that must appear in a few days. Of course whether ill or well, stupid or fertile, he must produce the same amount of fun, pathos or sentiment. His gun must be regularly loaded and discharged at command. I should think it would wear his life out."

Motley's fears were realized within a few years.—London Chronicle.

Mr. E. E. Matthews is Judge for the Tankard competition, and Mr. J. D Elwell for the district cup. The games will be played on the third and one on the fourth week of January next.

Ferguson, the retiring president, has been a most energetic and painstaking officer, and in his successor, Mr. Waddell, the Club is fortunate in possessing a gentleman who has always been most hard working and self sacrificing in all matters connected with curling, and who will undoubtedly prove as efficient in his position as has been his predecessors in office. The Club is also fortunate in getting the services of Mr. J. A Ferguson, as assistant Secretary-Treasurer, whose duties no body of men could wish a more conscientious and hard-working officer.

The Pitching Records Of The World's Series

Chicago, Oct 24.—In the final defeat of Chicago for the world's championship, Coombs, the Philadelphia pitcher, who already had won two games, threw only 120 balls to the plate, while Mordecai Brown, the Cub twirler, in his effort to stop the men who finally became champions, hurled 142. As compared with the former games, Coombs twirling was about equal. On Monday at Philadelphia Bender threw 120 balls to the plate. On Tuesday Coombs threw 101, the game in which he gave nine bases on balls. On Thursday he threw 120 and on Saturday Bender heaved 110.

Chicago pitchers in the opening games in the East threw 101 balls to the batters. On Tuesday 149 and on Saturday 135 as against 142 yesterday.

During the series the Chicago pitchers threw 650 balls to the plate, as compared with 621 by the Athletics.

Collins Says Cobb Is His Ideal Ball Player

Chicago, Oct 24.—There is one ball player in the American League, who rejoiced over Ty Cobb's victory in winning the batting championship of the world and the prize auto, almost as much as the Georgian himself. He is Eddie Collins, the Athletic star. When Eddie heard the result of the official figures he gave a whoop of joy and hurried away to congratulate Cobb.

Collins is a great admirer of Lajoie. He thinks the Frenchman is without a peer as a second baseman but he looks upon Ty Cobb as the greatest of all ball players.

"Cobb has been the base ball model that I have tried to copy after ever since I have been in the league," said Eddie. "He is the most wonderful player of this or any other time. I do not hold any ill will against him for beating the Athletics out of two pennants in 1907 and again last season. Rather I think he is entitled to the greatest credit for playing the greatest credit for playing the article of ball he did in an effort to clean us."

All of the other Athletic players were pulling for Lajoie to win.

A TRUE DEER STORY

BY B. PARKER

Now that it has come to the time of year when, passing a group of animated men, who at eagerly chatting, we may hear the words "Well, what about the deer hunt? High time the arrangements were being made." And this leads to a little incident which happened in the Parker-Thurston party a few seasons' hunt ago.

We were camped at the foot of Long Lake in a most spacious and a most comfortable camp, and were having a right jolly good time. For luck had been coming our way from the first of the hunting expedition. But suddenly there came a change, we would go out in the morning, home at noon, back again after dinner, and yet there was no game to be had. Despair had almost mastered the different members of the party and we were pretty nearly decided to pack our be-

OLD FAMILIES.

Some In Europe and In the Orient That Are Really Ancient.

In Great Britain and on the continent those families pride themselves that count them an entry through ter generations, but their claims to really ancient lineage seem insignificant when compared with those of certain houses in the orient.

We read that the oldest family in Great Britain, the Mar family in Scotland, may trace its pedigree to 1093. Then, too, we have the Campbells of Argyll, whose date is put down at 1190. The Grosvenor family, that of the Duke of Westminster, refers its origin to the same year that the Conqueror "came over"—i. e., 1066. The Austrian house of Hapsburg goes back farther than that, its date being 952, while the Bourbons proudly mention 864 as the date of their origin.

But none of them is to be mentioned in the same breath with the emperor of Japan, whose office has been filled by members of his family for a period of over 2,500 years, the present ruler being the one hundred and twenty second in the line. The first emperor of Japan sat on the throne about the time when Nebuchadnezzar was flourishing—that is, in 650 B. C.

Another oriental branch, the descendants of Mohammed, presents claims not to be dismissed. The prophet was born in 570, and a list of his descendants has been carefully retained, being duly set forth in a volume kept in Mecca. Little or no doubt exists of the authenticity of the long list of names of Mohammed's descendants as registered in this sacred book.—Harper's Weekly.

WANTED NO FUSS.

Any Old Thing Would Do For Dinner, So She Said.

Mrs. Betsy Baxter was the last person in the world to want anybody to make trouble on her account. When she "dropped in" on Mrs. Doolittle unexpectedly for dinner one day she made her position on this point quite clear. "Don't you go to a mite of bother on my account, Mis' Doolittle. You know that I'm a person for whom you can just lay down an extra plate and set before me anything you happen to have in the house.

"If you just fry a chicken same as you would for your own folks, an' make up a pan o' your tea biscuits that no one can bent, an' open a glass o' your red currant jelly, an' have a dish o' your quince preserves, an' some o' the pound cake you most always have in your cake jar, you do that, an' have some piping hot apple fritters with hot maple sirup to go with 'em, an' some o' your good coffee, an' any vegetables you happen to have in the house—I like sweet potatoes the way you fix 'em mightily—but, la, just have anything else you happen to have.

"I'm one that expects an' is willing to eat what's set before me, an no questions asked nor fault found when I go visiting. So don't you put yourself out a mite for me. If you have what I've mentioned an' anything else you want to have I'll be satisfied. I ain't one that cares very much about what I eat anyhow. As the saying is, 'any old thing' will do for me."—Puck.

Recipe For a Flower Garden.

Take twenty square yards of sand and pebbles, stir in sufficient clay to make a compact water tight mass, ram down hard and score the surface with a rake. Add carefully ten packets of seeds of the most magnificent flower known that will grow anywhere and under any conditions, throwing up a continuous succession of enormous flower trusses from March to November, each petal five inches across and of the richest and most glowing tints. This is the commonest of all flowers and will be found listed on any page of any florist's catalogue. Set the whole out to rise, keeping it moist and warm. After allowing the mass to rise four mouths sprinkle red spiders and green aphides plentifully over the top and soak well with tears. The net result may be preserved in a small bottle of alcohol for future reference.—Philadelphia North American.

An Open Air Hotel.

A man from the west was looking for a friend in New York who had gone west. He heard his friend had been sleeping on the benches in Bryant park and went over there to look for him. There were a good many unfortunates on the benches, but the particular friend the westerner wanted to find was not there. However, the westerner did find another man from his own town whom he knew and who knew the man for whom he was searching.

"Where's Jones?" asked the westerner, prodding the man he knew.

"Aw," replied the bobo sleepily, "he ain't come in yet."—New York Sun.

Nothing More to Be Said.

"My wife always lets me have the last word," remarked the meek looking man.

"Indeed!" exclaimed his friend in tones which implied a doubt of the other's veracity.

"She does, really. Whenever I say 'Yes my dear, you are quite right,' she stops talking immediately.

Her Little Joke.

Logical.

"Mother," asked little Ethel, "now that you're in mourning for Cousin Adelaide will you wear black night dresses too?"

"What an absurd question, child!"

"Oh, I only thought you might be as sorry at night as you were during the day," ventured Ethel.—Harper's Bazar.

DIFFERENCES IN FOGS.

Sea Mist and London Gloom Have Nothing In Common.

The fog of London and the fog of the sea alike discompose traffic, and omnibuses and steamships alike have had to lay to for safety. But while the London fog gets into your inmost room and baffles even the electric light—though the candle comes out triumphant curiously the densest fog at sea does not disturb the saloon or the stateroom. Why is that?

The word "fog" has not been traced farther back than the sixteenth century, but the thing was known in the early years of the fourteenth. The commons, with the prelates and nobles visiting London for the parliaments and on other occasions, united to petition Edward I. to compel the burning only of dry wood and charcoal, as the growing use of sea coal corrupted the air with its stink and smoke, to the great prejudice and detriment of health. In 1308 the king prohibited the use of coal. Heavy ransom and fines were inflicted for disobedience. In the case of recalcitrant brewers, dyers and other artificers the furnaces and kilns were destroyed. But the restriction was evidently removed, for in 1308 $250—probably equal to about $4,000 now—was paid from the exchequer for wood and coal for the coronation of Edward II.—London Graphic.

MODERN BUSINESS.

The Big Jobs Demand Hustlers Who Are Gentlemen.

A notable change has taken place in American business methods within the last decade. Increasingly men of large affairs are asking when a young man is recommended for a big job, "Is he a gentleman?" This is significant in two ways. It means that the big business men are themselves gentlemen and like to deal with men who speak their own language and that American business methods have grown to be such that the gentleman has an advantage.

There was a time when a man who was a hustler could be a cad if he liked and it did not hurt his chances much. But that time has passed. The big business men of today want young men who are tactful, intelligent, independent, yet unassuming; who would know how to talk to a diplomat and be at home in a good club; who could be trusted to behave kindly, honorably and discreetly in any situation of life; who, in short, have as their ideal the old, never changing ideal of the gentleman. Not everybody can define it, but everybody knows it at sight.

The gentleman, in short, can work along the line of least resistance, and that is why he is wanted.—Bookkeeper.

An Open Giver.

Harold's father was in the habit of giving $1 a Sunday to the church. This was put in a numbered envelope in the collection plate and the amount credited to him on the church books. Mr. T. was away for the summer and on his return inclosed his arrears in the envelope and intrusted it to Harold to put on the plate. When the little boy came home from church he said proudly, "I put an awful lot of money on the plate this morning—more'n anybody else, I guess."

"You got the envelope there all right?" asked his father carelessly, for Harold had been almost afraid to carry so much money.

"Oh, yes," he said, "but I took the envelope off when I got there and just put the money on the plate in my hand. Nobody'd have known how much I gave if I'd left it in the envelope."

Elephant Threnodies.

The natives of certain portions of south central Africa, says the Duchess of Aosta in Harper's Weekly, look on the death of an elephant as an event. They attach an almost religious aspect to it. "As soon as the animal stalked is stretched out on the ground the hunters climb upon the huge, still warm body and there perform a dance, gesticulating and shaking their guns, accompanied by a sort of litany, in which they extol the animal and his qualities, his strength, his size, his cunning; then they praise the skill of the hunter, his prompt eye, his accurate shot. And this song is just murmured, as if they were afraid that if they raised their voices they would attract the curse of the spirit which has just left the animal and is still floating round him."

How Parchment Came to Be Used.

When the literary jealousy of the Egyptians caused them to stop the supply of papyrus, the king of Pergamos, a city in Asia Minor, introduced the use of sheepskin in a form called, from the place of its invention, pergamena, whence our word parchment is believed to be derived. Vellum, a finer article, made from calfskin, was also used. Many of the books done on vellum in the middle ages were transcribed by monks, and often it took years to complete a single copy.

RESTAURANTS.

They Really Had Their Origin In the First French Revolution.

The restaurant of the present time had its origin in the first French revolution, toward the close of the eighteenth century. And the reputation of the French for good cookery and the delicacy of taste in eating as well as in producing toothsome dishes and morsels dates practically from the same time.

That revolution meant ruin to many noble families, and their downfall meant ruin also for their chefs, so some of the latter hit upon the idea of opening houses where dainties prepared by their skilled hands could be obtained. If the experiment succeeded the chefs would be as well off as when in service. The idea was pleasing to the public, the restaurants did a large business, and the proprietors had no reason to regret the revolution from a monetary point of view.

Then it occurred to others that the people might appreciate being educated up to this fine cookery, and many books on the culinary art were published and sold well. One of the most noted of these was "The Gourman Almanack," which appeared in 1798.

Restaurant really means "restoring" and was applied to these places because you went there to have something to revive or restore your failing strength.

MAKING NEEDLES.

Various Processes Through Which the Steel Wire Must Pass.

Needles are made from steel wire, which is first cut by shears from coils into the length of the needles to be made. After a bath of such bits as have been cut out they are placed in a furnace, then rolled until perfectly straight. Next the needle pointer takes up a dozen or so of the wires and rolls them between his thumb and finger, with their ends on a turning grindstone, first one and then the other being ground. The little steel bobbins are next fed into a machine which flattens and gutters the heads, after which the eyes are punched.

They are now complete needles, but rough and easily bent. Careful heating and sudden cooling gives them the necessary temper, and nothing remains but to give them their final polish. On a course cloth needles are spread to the number of 40,000 or 50,000. Emery dust is strewed over them, oil is sprinkled on and soft soap daubed over the cloth, which, rolled tightly, is thrown into a pot with others, where it rolls about for twelve hours or more.

When taken from this friction bath the needles require only rinsing in clean hot water, when they are ready to be sorted and packed.—Chicago Tribune.

Fulton and the Clermont.

The first trip of Robert Fulton up the Hudson river in the Clermont was thus described in the American Citizen of Aug. 17, 1810:

"Mr. Fulton's ingenious Steam Boat, invented with a View to the Navigation of The Mississippi from New Orleans upwards, Sails today from the North River, near the State Prison, to Albany. The Velocity of The Steam Boat is Calculated at four miles an hour. It is said that it will make a progress of two against The Current of The Mississippi, and if so it will certainly be a very valuable acquisition to the Commerce of the Western States."

According to Edward Hagaman Hall's history, the Clermont made the trip to Albany in thirty-two hours. The state prison referred to stood on the block in New York now bounded by Washington, West Tenth, West and Charles Streets, in old Greenwich village.

Vessels That Failed.

There was a time when it was believed possible to prevent seasickness by means of specially constructed vessels, says the London Chronicle. The Calais-Douvres, a twin ship, was used on the channel service for many years. Great things were expected from this, but she proved a slow boat, and her passengers were by no means immune from seasickness. Another attempt in this direction was the Castalia, in which the saloon was suspended like a hammock with a view to minimizing the pitching and rolling. This turned out an utter failure. If the rolling was less than in ordinary vessels the pitching was quite as bad and, moreover, the swinging mechanism occasionally stuck. After a very few trips across the channel the Castalia was taken off the service.

Easy Figuring.

Ascum—I suppose you haven't had time to figure out yet how much your cashier took?

Bank President—Oh, yes. We knew in a very short time.

Ascum—Why, I thought he took a great deal.

Bank President—Exactly. We merely had to count what he left.

Why He Resigned.

"So you resigned?"

"Yes—I couldn't stand the way the firm treated me."

"What did they do?"

"Took my name off the pay roll."—Exchange.

SOUTH AFRICA'S ARMY.

Compulsory Service as Cadets Has Been Advocated.

Interesting details of South Africa's proposals for the organization of a Union Army are published. It is suggested that there should be compulsory service for all school boys from the age of 10 to 18 in the cadet forces of South Africa. Drill, discipline and the knowledge of the miniature rifle would be imparted in the earlier stages, gradually extending to skill at arms with the service rifle, with regular instruction at the Bisley targets and field targets, arranged in accordance with the present musketry course for the South African local forces. A combined Cadet Bisley meeting would be held annually in one of the four provinces, and there would be annual cadet camps in each state, lasting for a full fourteen days. Service with the senior cadets would follow from 15 to 18, with a stiffer musketry and drill course, and annual training in camp for fourteen days.

From 18 to 25, the drill course would be that for the trained soldier, with annual camps lasting fourteen days. Finally, there would be ten years' service in the Reserves, who would be required to spend from four days to a week in the annual camps. It is proposed that the whole of the Union should be divided into a number of small areas, each of which would be placed under a permanent instructional officer directly responsible to the Territorial or Provincial Inspector stationed at the military centre in each of the four provinces. His duties would include the inspection of the school cadets, the organization and training of the Senior Cadets, and the enrolment, equipment, and training of the trained soldiers. He would further be charged with the supervision and the registration of all the male inhabitants, and would have to record the residence and classification of Reserve men in his area, in addition to looking after the organization and maintenance of rifle clubs.

For the training of officers it is proposed that a military college should be started at Bloemfontein, which is regarded as the most central spot, on the lines of Kingston, Ont., where the permanent instructional officer, as well as those required for the district and headquarters staff, and for the permanent troops, would be trained. All should be military officers pure and simple, determined to devote their life and energies to a military career only. The training should last for three years, the age for entry to the college being not less than seventeen nor over nineteen. The fees for education, including board, lodging, books, clothing, and equipment, should not be more than $500 a year. There should also be a number of cadet scholarships. After the three years' course the young officer should attend a winter training with the regular troops in India, or a summer training in the United Kingdom, and on his return to South Africa he should do one year's duty under the best instructional officer in his particular district. It is computed that after four and a half years' education, and at the age of 23 or 24, the Union subaltern would be capable of undertaking the arduous and responsible duties of an instructional officer. It is added that the scheme aims at constructing a mobile and highly efficient striking force, trained in horsemanship, marksmanship under the most difficult conditions, and discipline.

"Capping" Women.

At the recent conferring of degrees at Manchester University, honorary M.A. degrees were conferred on two notable Manchester women, Miss Horniman, described by her sponsor, Prof. Conway, as the "most potent living patron of the English drama, who has had the boldness to render a service to our national culture which no masculine mind had dared to attempt," and Miss Dendy, again in the words of the sponsor, whose "persuasive influence has led to the establishment of four separate schools for the permanent care of the mentally unfit, thus earning for the North of England the rare distinction of leading the way to what is nothing less than a solid advance in civilization." Miss Horniman is the pioneer alike of the hoped-for National Theatre and the more possible Repertoire Theatre. Steadily refusing to encourage "the long-run," beloved of male stage managers and fashionable playwrights, she presented in the Abbey Theatre, Dublin (a charming little theatre built on the ruins of the old mortuary)—and the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester, literary and dramatic plays typical of life rather than the manners of it. In conferring a degree honoris causa on Miss Dendy, says Women at Home, Manchester University honored one who sympathized with the needs of the defective intellect, and, in conferring the same on Miss Horniman it honored one who sympathized with the needs of the ordinary human mind.

The Brontes' School.

A correspondent writes from Dewsbury: Roe Head, where the Charlotte and Emily Bronte went to school, was put up for auction recently, but was withdrawn, as no suitable offer was made for it. Roe Head is a large stone-built residence, standing in grounds which cover many acres. It is picturesquely situated between Hudder-field and Mirfield, and adjoins Kirklees Park, where Robin Hood is buried. In the days of the Brontes the school was kept by the Misses Wooler, who in their early days belonged to Batley, and were regular members of the Methodist New Connexion chapel there. An object of great historic interest near Roe Head is a 'dumb steeple,' around which the Luddites met and drilled, and then proceeded past Roe Head to Rawfold Mill armed with swords, guns, knives and other deadly weapons, making a desperate attack on the mill-owner, Mr. Cartwright. The event is vividly described in 'Shirley.'"

WEDDING BELLS

HANBIDGE—GILLESPIE.

A very pretty house wedding took place this afternoon at 2 o'clock, when Miss Edith Gillespie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Gillespie, Lock street, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. Clayton Hanbridge, son of Mr. John Hanbridge, of Otonabee. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. C. Roddiford, pastor of Park street Baptist church. The young couple entered the room to the strains of the wedding march, which was played by Miss Hazel Gillespie. The bride who was given away by her father, looked very charming in a beautiful travelling suit of navy blue cheviot. The young couple were unattended. After the ceremony Miss Nellie Pilling sang "Oh Perfect Love."

Last evening the bride was made the recipient of a silver sugar bowl with spoon hanging on it, by the choir of Park street church. An address was also read. The young people of the church also gave her a kitchen shower, thereby showing the esteem in which she was held by her many friends.

About fifty guests attended. The happy couple left on the 4.38 C. P. R. train this afternoon for Toronto and Buffalo on their honeymoon, and upon their return will reside in Otonabee. Mr. and and Mrs. Hanbridge received the heartiest congratulations and best wishes of a host of friends.

BURNS—McCANN.

Burns, of North Bay. The ceremony was performed by Father McGuire. Miss Mamie Allin played the wedding march. The bride, who was very attractively attired in a pretty dress of white net over silk, with a black Gainsborough hat, was given away by her father. She carried a pearl prayer book and a beautiful amethyst rosary, a gift of the groom. The bridesmaid was Miss Maggie McCann. She was prettily dressed in an attire of white silk muslin and also carried a pearl prayer book and amethyst rosary, a gift of the groom. The groomsman was Mr. Ernest McCann.

Mr. and Mrs. Burns left on the 4.38 train for Toronto, Niagara and Buffalo, on their honeymoon, after which they will reside in North Bay, where the groom holds a responsible position.

The only thing that was in any way a treat about "the Alaskan" at the Grand last night was its name and the musical comedy, with the fat north locale, won instantaneous favour. JAS. GORHAM ON TRIAL FOR MOTHER'S MURDER

"No sir."

"Were you not taken over to Peck's field by them."

"Yes sir."

"Did they argue with you or try to get you to say that McNairy stood at the elm tree?"

"No. They told me that was where he stood."

"Did you agree with them?"

"No sir. I thought he stood about three feet south of where they said."

"Were any threats made to you?"

"No, sir."

Patrick Gorham, brother of the prisoner identified the revolver produced as one he had taken from his brother on the bridge on the night of the shooting and also identified the cartridges as those he had also obtained from his brother. The latter were in his pocket. There were no cartridges for the rifle in the house the witness affirmed positively.

To Mr. O'Connell, the witness said that when his brother took drink he became foolish, and frothed at the mouth. When he became real bad tempered he would also do this. "It would seem at times," said the witness, "that something bothered him. He had a pain in his side which would go to his head. I have noticed this most frequently in the past year and one half. He did not associate with other members of the family very freely and seldom took his meals with them." The witness testified that he had seen his brother at 5.30 on the evening of the shooting, and that his voice was thick and his eyes appeared as though he was drunk.

At this point the court adjourned for luncheon.

Mrs. Harold Dowson of Midland was a recent guest of her brother, Dr. Kindred.

Rev. Mr. Cree of Norwood, exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Skene on Sunday morning last. No service was held in the Presbyterian Church in the evening, so as to allow the congregation to attend the Methodist Anniversary services.

Mrs. Oscar Hicks, and children, left last week for Toronto, where she will spend a few weeks with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Deverell, 39 Denison Ave., before going to join Mr. Hicks at Goderich.

On Monday evening Oct. 17th, a large number of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church gathered at the Church to bid their retiring organist, Miss Maude Graham, who was married on Wednesday last to Mr. Gabriel of Toronto, a farewell previous to her departure and to present her with a most beautiful silver tea service on a silver tray, as a token of their appreciation of that young ladys past services in the church. It was accompanied by an address which was read by Mr. Thompson, M.P.P., and the presentation was made by Miss Howe. Rev. A. C. Camp, of Sault Ste. Marie, a former pastor of the church here, responded on behalf of Miss Graham, and testified also to the valuable aid the young lady had rendered during his pastorate.

Refreshments were then served, shortly after which the evening was brought to a close.

The Shredded Wheat Banquet under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of St. John's Church on Thursday evening last in the Town Hall, was in every way a decided success. The attendance was very large and the supper was highly appreciated and relished by every one. The tables were prettily arranged and adorned and the many dishes served were really dainty. The members of the Girl's Guild of St. John's Church were the waitresses. When all the guests had been served, they were entertained to a short programme as follows:

Address, Rev. C. W. Holdsworth, B.A.

Instrumental Solo, Miss E. Hogg.

Violin Solo—Mr. E. L. Holdsworth of Port Hope.

Address on Natural Food by the Manager in charge of Banquet, Mr. J. Hewitt.

LATEST NEWS FROM HASTINGS

Examiner Special.

Hastings, Oct. 26th. The Asphodel Township Sabbath School Association held their Annual Convention in the Methodist Church, Hastings, on Wednesday last with the president, Mr. L. Brown of Norwood in the chair, and Mr. A. Brethen acting as secretary. The main feature for the afternoon session was Rev. Mr. Gallagher, provincial secretary, who seems to be just the right man in the right place. The round table conference proved most interesting and beneficial and was thoroughly enjoyed, particularly by those interested in Sunday School work. The evening session was addressed by Rev. Mr. Richards of Westwood, an able young speaker, Mr. R. Lee of Peterborough, Public School Inspector and Rev. Mr. Glassford, who gave a most eloquent address on "The Boy Problem." We trust good result may follow the convention.

A very pretty though quiet wedding took place on Wednesday, Oct. 19th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Richardson, when their daughter, Margie, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Robt. Collins, a popular young man of Asphodel. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. C. W. Barrett, in the presence of only the immediate relations of the contracting parties. After the ceremony and the customary congratulations, the bride led the way to the dining room, where a sumptuous repast was served and much enjoyed by the guests. The happy couple left on the afternoon train for a honey-moon trip, followed by the best wishes of a host of friends who join in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded life.

Rev. C. W. Barrett, was in Roseneath on Sunday taking pulpit work for Rev. Mr. Edwards.

Mr. McCallum, of Tweed, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Boxsee.

Mr. Winter of Campbellford, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist Church on Sunday morning. In the evening union service was held in the Presbyterian Church, in the interest of the Bible Society. The meeting was addressed by Rev. D. A. Thomson, agent for this district. A good congregation was in attendance.

Rev. Mr. Edwards of Roseneath, conducted anniversary services at the Bethel appointment on Sunday last.

Mrs. J. Greenley of Campbellford, has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Hartnisph, town.

Mrs. E. J. Laing and daughters of Norwood, were in town on Saturday.

Miss Ray Humphries of Keene, has been the guest of her cousin, Miss Hollie Humphries.

Mr. T. Cavanagh, of Peterboro, had been in this district, looking for horses to buy.

HEALING POWER A MARVEL

So remarkable is the healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment that the results of a single application are often a marvel to persons who witness them for the first time. Mrs. C. Hopkins, St. George, Ont., tells how her son was cured of blood poisoning which got started in a wound received at a threshing. Relief was prompt and cure effected by three boxes.

JURY FINDS GORHAM GUILTY WITH STRONG RECOMMENDATION TO MERCY

Jurors Were Nearly Three Hours in Reaching a Verdict—Crown and Counsel For Defence Did Not Address Them.

HIS LORDSHIP'S REMARKS

At twenty minutes to four, the jury in the Gorham case returned to the court room. Their verdict was that of guilty, with a strong recommendation to mercy, on account of drink.

His Lordship stated that he would not sentence the prisoner, but would forward the jury's recommendation to Ottawa.

Yesterday Afternoon's Session.

The Crown's case in the murder charge against James Gorham was brought to a close at 3.42 o'clock yesterday afternoon, it having taken over three hours and one half to place all the evidence of the prosecution before the jury. The only new witness called by the Crown after luncheon was Martin Gorham, the prisoner's fourteen year old brother.

Witnesses for the defence heard through the afternoon were Annie and Minnie Gorham, sisters of the prisoner, and Sister Mary St. Edward, former principal of the Lake street Separate school.

The trend of the evidence given by these witnesses seemed to indicate that the defence was endeavouring to show that Gorham was not mentally responsible for his actions. Evidence was given that he often acted very queerly; he used to froth at the mouth when he became angry and had a peculiar freak of refusing to eat his meals with the rest of the family. His sisters testified that they had often noticed the servants in their brother, and Sister St. Edward gave it as her opinion that the prisoner was not responsible for what he had done and was not fit to be at large. Another feature of the defence testimony which was also brought out in Mr. O'Connell's cross-examination of the Crown witnesses, was an obvious endeavour to show that Constable Meharry was not directly in line between Gorham and the house and that the prisoner did not aim at the officer but fired to one side of him.

Patrick Gorham, the prisoner's brother, whose cross-examination by Mr. O'Connell had been commenced before luncheon, was recalled to the stand when court resumed after the adjournment.

The witness said that his brother had gone to school for about six years and was, he thought, in the second book when he left. Speaking of going up on the bridge where the prisoner had climbed, the witness said his brother seemed to be in a kind of a dream.

"What conversation did you have with the prisoner on the bridge?" asked the Crown Prosecutor.

"He asked if mother was dead, and I told him yes," was the reply. "I asked him to come down and he said no."

Another Brother's Evidence.

Martin Gorham, a younger brother of the prisoner, was the next witness. He testified that he would be fifteen in November. The prisoner came home on the night in question at 6.15 o'clock. He had brought two axes and a saw with him, and when his mother refused to allow him to bring them into the house, he said he would fix things and started to tear down the pig pen. The pigs escaped and the prisoner caught one of them. His sister had grabbed him by the arm and he let the pig go. The prisoner went into the house and went upstairs, and came down with a revolver. It belonged to his older brother Jack, and was kept in the latter's room. The witness did not remember him saying anything about shooting anybody. He picked up a tea cup and shot it to pieces. The witness went with Mr. White as far as the C. P. R. bridge where they met Officer Meharry coming over and returned with him.

The witness told the story of the shooting by his brother. His evidence followed that of other witnesses as to the conversation that had taken place and the movements of his brother and Officer Meharry, but said that the latter was not in line between the house and the prisoner. The latter had not aimed directly at Meharry, but in his direction.

When his brother came home that afternoon he looked as if he was drunk.

"Can you tell when he is drunk?" he was asked.

"Yes sir," was the reply.

"When my brother was coming up the road he was staggering."

The witness stated that his mother told him to tell his father that Jimmy was crazy; that he had a revolver and was going to shoot them."

To Mr. O'Connell the witness said that he had noticed peculiarities about his brother. James often refused to eat his meals with the rest of the family. One when he was breaking some wood he had heard his brother talking to the wood. He often frothed at the mouth.

The Case For the Defence.

This concluded the Crown case and the defence was commenced with the calling of Annie Gorham, the prisoner's eldest sister, to the stand.

She testified that on the day of the death of her mother she had come home at 6.45 o'clock and had found her brother acting queerly, throwing up his arms and screaming.

"What impression did you get from his actions?" asked Mr. O'Connell.

"The impression left on my mind was that he was crazy," was the reply.

He started to tear down the pig pen at the south end of the house, and when the beards refused to come out he would say, 'You won't come then? I'll show you!'"

"What happened when he tore down the pig pen?"

"The pigs escaped and he grabbed one by the leg and drew out his pen-knife and was going to cut its throat."

"Did he do so?"

"No sir, there was a rifle lying there and I picked it up and struck him with it and he let the pig go."

"Was this the rifle," asked Mr. O'Connell, holding up the weapon produced in court.

"Yes, that is it."

"What happened then?"

"He went into the house and picked up some chairs and smashed them on the stove."

The witness stated that Jimmy then went upstairs and that when Captain White came into the house, he fired a basket of clothes down the stairs.

Capt. White says that when the prisoner came down-stairs he pointed a revolver at him and said he would blow his brains out. It that true?"

"No sir, that is not true."

"Then Capt White says your brother swung the revolver around and pointed it at you and the others and said he would shoot?"

"That is not true."

"Did your brother call your mother the names Captain White has mentioned?"

"No, he did not."

Miss Gorham testified that when Officer Meharry arrived on the scene she had told him that Jimmy had a loaded revolver and to be careful of it. The officer replied that he would. The witness was in the parlour of the house when the first shot was fired. When this was done, Meharry was standing near the oak tree in the field and not in a direct line between the kitchen door and the prisoner. When the first shot was fired she went out into the kitchen. While she was doing so the second shot was fired. She did not think that the man had time to shift their relative positions. Her mother was leaning against a cupboard in the house about twelve or fourteen feet from the door when she was struck.

After the shooting her brother came into the house and asked her if he had shot his mother. She had answered yes and the prisoner had replied, "My God, I did not mean to shoot anyone." She couldn't tell from his actions whether he was drunk or crazy, but thought that he was crazy.

She had noticed peculiarities about her brother. He would talk to the wood he was chopping and hold conversations with the cat. When he came into the house after the shooting he carried the cat in his arms. About fourteen years ago the prisoner had met with an accident. He had fallen from the top of a tree and as a result had been unconscious for nearly a day. He complained about his tongue, which was often sore and purple and his eyes always had a fixed stare. He was always worse when he took liquor. He refused to eat his meals with the rest of the family.

"What other peculiarities have you noticed?"

"He would take my rings and give them away for a plug of tobacco."

"Were they valuable rings?"

"Yes sir."

"Was a doctor ever called in to attend him?"

"Yes, Dr. McGrath came over one night last winter when we thought he had a fit. He said he saw the devil and lay on his back screaming and kicking. His eyes seemed funny and he frothed at the mouth. He was awfully dull for a few days af-

FIRE DESTROYS WHOLE BLOCK IN PRINCIPAL BUSINESS SECTION IN VICTORIA, B.C., THIS MORNING

Special Wire to The Examiner.

VICTORIA, B.C., OCT. 27—Fire swept a whole block in the principal business section here early this morning, doing damage to the extent of two million dollars. There were rumours of several casualities in the flames, but searchers among the ruins this morning failed to locate any bodies. It is believed nobody was injured. The greatest loss was sustained by David Spencer & Co. Their loss will be three hundred thousand dollars. The Western Union building and a number of lesser buildings were destroyed. The Driad Hotel, Pemberton Hotel, and the Times building was destroyed, troops being called out to aid the firemen, several of whom were hurt by falling walls.

TWO CALLS

The brigade received two calls yesterday afternoon. The first was a chimney fire at 3.45 o'clock at the Peterborough Canoe Company's establishment. It was a bad one and required four chemicals to extinguish it, but no damage was done.

The second was a fire at Routley's, 379 George Street. On the third floor one of the girls was using an electric iron and had the iron down on the board without turning the current off. She left it there for some time and it began to smoke. A telephone alarm was sent in, but there was no fire. This call was sent in by telephone at 4.55 o'clock.

THE MICROSCOPE.
Proves That Parasites Cause Hair Loss.
Nine-tenths of the diseases of the scalp and hair are caused by parasitic germs. The importance of this discovery by Professor Unna, of the Charity Hospital, Hamburg, Germany, can not be overestimated. It explains why ordinary hair preparations, even of the most expensive character fail to cure dandruff, because they do not, and they can not, kill the dandruff germ. The only hair preparation in the world that positively destroys the dandruff parasite that burrows up the scalp into scales called scurf or dandruff, is Newbro's Herpicide. In addition to its destroying the dandruff germ, Herpicide is also a delightful hair dressing. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co. Detroit, Mich.
For sale by McDermid and Jury, druggists, also Payne's drug store. $1 bottle guaranteed.

IMPROVEMENTS

The management of the Royal Theatre has recently improved its handsome amusement hall, by a valuable addition to the stage. New curtains were received last evening and will be used for the first time this evening. They consist of a drop curtain and several depicting scenes that will be used in the presentation of various acts that come to this popular theatre. It is a valuable acquisition and secured only at considerable expense. Mr. Pappas is to be congratulated on his enterprise.

ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST

Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.
BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS
Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nineteenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

THE HARVEST OF CARELESSNESS

During September, according to official returns, there were 272 industrial accidents to working men in Canada. Of these 93 were fatal and 181 resulted in serious injuries. As a rule accidents of all kinds are the result of carelessness on the part of the victims themselves, or due to defective construction and maintenance of the machinery or scaffolding, or other appliances, used in work. It is a little remarkable that all of the four civil cases inscribed for hearing at the present Assizes, were brought to recover damages from individuals or corporations for death or injury of person or property. In two cases settlement was made for substantial damages, for amounts far in excess of the expenditure that would have been required to make safe the conditions which were to be regarded as responsible for the accidents. At the same time it is highly probable that the blame for accidents did not rest wholly upon the neglect or indifference of the corporations mulcted. The person who suffered injury or death were, no doubt, contributors to the mishaps through more or less carelessness on their part. It comes to this that perhaps 99 per cent. of the 272 industrial accidents embraced in the records for September were avoidable, if due care had been observed by the sufferers themselves, or due precaution had been taken by employers in the protection of machinery or in providing safe conditions.

CENTRAL PARK.

A day or two ago the Examiner gave space to the views of a citizen who urges and advocates the laying of a cement walk across Central Park. His views in this regard are not the views of the Examiner nor, we believe, of the vast majority of citizens who desire that Central Park, should be made the greatest possible credit to the city and the greatest possible pleasure asset of the citizens.

The proposal of a cement walk at once destroys the park idea and converts the place into a thoroughfare. The park was never intended for a thoroughfare. Walks through parks are not thoroughfares, but avenues for access to its several parts. This is the case with Victoria Park, which is closed in winter when sunken walks would be unfit for use. These walks are used by thousands of school children weekly and, to their credit, with so much care, that there is no encroachment on the sward such as we see in Central Park. This would not probably be the case if the park were open in winter, early spring or late autumn, and people would, by the wet state of the walks, be driven to take to the grass. A concrete walk across Central Park would be as incongruous as a bull in a china shop. It is a hard unyielding thing, all right for a thoroughfare, but utterly out of place in a pleasure resort like a park, and, in no park in the world where taste, refinement and the fitness of things decide, can such a monstrosity be found.

Central Park should be made either a campus like that in front of the University buildings in the city of Toronto, or a park. It should not be used as it cannot be used as a park in winter or in dirty end-of-the season weather. It is not surprising that the Council does not jump at the idea of putting a public street in the form of a "wide granolithic pavement" across Central Park. The City Council has done very well in surrounding the park with good granolithic pavements for thoroughfare purposes, and in wet weather or snowy weather, the public can use these, which they would have to do if Central Park, like Victoria Park, were closed to access in the winter. The demand for a granolithic pavement, with a view of making Central Park a "short cut" for a few people, does not differ one whit in principle from a demand for a diagonal walk through every square in the city, so that people should have a "short cut" to and fro. This "short cut" idea is the curse of the city. It accounts for the corners of open lawns and our boulevards having the life tramped out of them, by vandal feet.

Central Park needs some things far more than a "wide granolithic pavement." It needs to be relieved from the divided jurisdiction which results in nothing being done and in the park being left to destruction at the caprice of the public who are indifferent to civic beauty and would sacrifice it to the demands of the laziness that, to save a few steps, would convert a park into a street. Till some definite jurisdiction over Central Park is substituted for the warring elements that are, at present, practically fighting for its destruction as a park, we shall continue to have conditions, unsatisfactory to the public and discreditable to the public spirit and good taste of Peterborough

Y.W.C.A. DAY NURSERY.

This dear old world of ours is a strange compound of good and bad. It is full of hearts that are full of noble impulses of charity and kindness—too often repaid with ingratitude.

The ladies of the Young Women's Christian Association have made a brave attempt to help those who need help, by the establishment, at their buildings, of a day nursery, or what the French call, creche, for the care of the infant children of mothers, whose work requires them to be away from home the greater part of the day. They have fitted up a nursery with cribs, playthings, and all the other necessary appurtenances required to amuse and meet the wants of such children. Food is provided, and a competent nurse, or matron, is always on duty during the day, to give the little youngsters the necessary care. They are in safety and comfort, instead of being exposed to the dangers incident to irresponsible children being left at home with fires burning—liable to set themselves or the house, or both, on fire—the raw conditions of gruesome tragedies.

It would be thought that mothers would be anxious to take advantage of this provision, by which, for the payment of five cents per day, they could leave home with happy hearts and have their toil lightened by the knowledge that their children were safe, warmed and fed. But there seems to be a strange indifference on the part of mothers. One mother, unfortunately typical, says, with an air of patronage, that while the weather is mild her children are all right—they can play about the streets, but when the weather becomes cold she might condescend to patronize the day nursery. Here is work for the agent of the Children's Aid Society. Mothers like this, who have so little sense of responsibility in respect of their children, as to prefer leaving them roaming the streets to having them well cared for, while she is necessarily away from them, is not, in this respect, at least, fit to have the care of children and, in the interests of the state, should be brought to better ways of thinking.

One thing that tends to harden the hearts of the benevolent and beneficent, is the ingratitude and indifference of those they help or seek to help, or give employment to. Women are notoriously to blame in this respect. They may have an empty larder at home, and need work to keep the wolf from the door, but they are unreliable, they disappoint employers, they break engagements, and break the law, for if the matter were pushed they could be punished for breach of the Masters and Servants Act. This indifference they show to the common obligations of business honesty, too often extends to the care of their families. It is no wonder that the kindly hearted get discouraged under the rebuffs they meet in trying to do good to those who will not even meet them half way. Women who refuse the conveniences of the Y. W. C. A. nursery are doing an injury to their children, and through this action, to the community. They are selfish and unmotherly if they are safe, and sheltered, and well fed, for they must be well treated, have four meals a day, must work short hours, must have car fare paid to and from their work, while little children, unable to care for themselves, are left at home, perhaps unfed, and certainly, especially in the season of fires, exposed to great danger. This does not apply, and is not applied to any one, whose case it does not fit.

Bourassaites And Conservatives Work Together For The Same End

The following is from the Montreal Herald.

The naval policy is, of course, vulnerable. Anti-Imperialists object to it as strongly as do those of us who are opposed to any movement of a separatist character. And to anti-Imperialists the men whose opinions Sir Wilfrid helped to form—the two ex-Liberals are appealing. It is probable that the reasoning addressed to these people will bear fruit in the ballot-box. And, as has already been remarked, even a reduced majority will be significant in this particular case, because it will mean that the influence exercised by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Quebec has been broken. On the question of the navy Sir Wilfrid has tried to get in between the two phases of opinion. In so doing he has failed to satisfy either, and as a consequence is in danger of heavy loss, not merely in Quebec, but elsewhere throughout the Dominion."

The foregoing is the Toronto Mail's summary of the position in Quebec. For once in a way the Herald and the Mail agree about something. We may take it that the Mail's exceedingly hope of what Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Lavergne may be able to do in Athabaska is shared by Conservative partisans everywhere, except, possibly, those who still think fairly well of Mr. Borden's leadership. These will be so resentful of the derision heaped upon that gentleman by Mr. Bourassa as to wish the Nationalist orator at the bottom of the sea. But it is probably true that the number is continuously decreasing of those who think Mr. Borden's leadership a matter of any consequence.

Can Bourassa hurt Laurier in Quebec? That is the great question for the Mail, and its fellow strategists. If he can reduce the majority in Athabaska to a few score or a few hundred, if he can capture a seat here or a seat there, if he could go into a general election looking strong enough to fairly divide the vote against Laurier, the Conservatives elsewhere would pluck up heart amazingly. There is no doubt of that. The Mail admits it, chuckles over it, prepares to acclaim Mr. Bourassa by reciting, in the article from which the foregoing extract is taken, all the occasions on which Mr. Bourassa voted against the government on questions of administrative detail.

But what most people will find most significant, because most cynical, is the cheerfulness with which the Mail states the position as against the government. The naval policy is "vulnerable." It is equally to be attacked by anti-Imperialists and by those of us who are opposed to any movement of a separatist character. It is too barefaced. Those who accuse Laurier of working for separation gleefully congratulate each other on the prospect that others, who accuse Laurier of having surrendered Canada's autonomy to Downing street, are in a fair way of conquering Laurier's defeat. It is brazen, and it would be unbelievable if we did not know by long experience how far the party spirit, the desire to get possession of the offices will carry those whom it dominates. There has been nothing quite so illuminating since the incident referred to as this avowal by the Mail.

As to the other side of the case having regard for the common honesty of the Canadian people and the universal feeling of pride in the development of the Dominion's strength it is more than open to doubt whether Sir Wilfrid took the wrong position when, as the Mail says, "he tried to get in between the two phases of opinion and in so doing satisfies neither." His Montreal speech, like the speech in Parliament, in which he declared for autonomy against contribution, for a local navy as against payment for Dreadnoughts is one upon which he can never get judgment of any Canadian. When the British fleets were withdrawn from the West Atlantic and the Pacific, with the declaration that Great Britain had all she could attend to nearer home, the time had come for Canada to do for herself the work from which, after nearly a century, Great Britain had withdrawn. Canada has business to attend to on two seaboards of great extent and the faster she grows the more there will be to look after. That is the work to which Sir Wilfrid would have her set her hand. It is doing her bit," to use the homely phrase of one in whom the sense of duty was strong. To do it, and to do it in their own way, under control of their own Parliament, is what Canadians are quite prepared for. The opposition of two sets of critics who are otherwise ready to fly at each other's throats will not prevent its being done.

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ont.—"I think it is no more than right for me to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. When I wrote to her some time ago I was a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend this medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and think they are fine."—Mrs. FRANK EMSLEY, Lindsay, Ontario.

We cannot understand why women will take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, without first trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"For me?" I repeated.

"For you! Yes." The man came to see you. If he had been alive you might have been in his toil by now. He was a very cunning person, and those who sent him were devils."

"How do you know these things?" I asked, amazed.

"From the letters which I ripped from his coat," he answered.

"He came to Brasted to see me, then?" I exclaimed.

"Precisely."

"And the letters which you took from him were they addressed to me?"

"They were."

I was getting angry, but Ray remained imperturbable.

"I think," I said, "you will admit that I have a right to them."

"Not a shadow of a doubt of it," he answered. "In fact, it was so obvious that I destroyed them."

"Destroyed my letters?"

"Precisely. I chose that course rather than allow them to fall into your hands."

"You admit, then," I said, "that I had a right to them."

"Indubitably. But they do not exist."

"You read them, without doubt. You can acquaint me with their contents."

"Some day," he said, "I probably shall. But not yet. Believe me or not, as you choose, but there are certain positions in which ignorance is the only possible safe state. You are in such a position at the present moment."

"Are you," I asked, "my moral guardian?"

"I have at least," he said, "incurred certain responsibilities on your behalf. You could no longer hold your present post and be in communication with the sender of those letters."

My anger died away despite myself. The man's strength and honesty of purpose were things which I could not bring myself to doubt. I continued my breakfast in silence.

"But tho the," he remarked, presently, "you, too, my young friend, were out early this morning."

"I was writing all night," I answered. "I had documents to put in the safe."

He shot a quick searching glance at me.

"You have been to the safe this morning, then?"

I answered him with a composure at which I inwardly marvelled.

"Certainly! It was the object of my coming here."

"You entered the room with the Duke. Was he in the study at that hour?"

"No, I went upstairs to him. I had a question to ask."

"And you have met Lord Blenavon? What do you think of him?"

"We were at Magdalen together for a term," I answered. "He was good enough to remember me."

"Ray smiled, but he did not speak another word to me all the breakfast-time. Once I made a remark to him, and his reply was curt, almost rude. I left the room a few minutes afterwards, and came face to face in the hall with Lady Angela.

"I am glad, Mr. Ducaine," she remarked, "that your early morning labours have given you an appetite. You have been in to breakfast, have you not?"

"Your father was good enough to insist upon it," I answered.

"You have seen him already this morning, then?"

"For a few minutes only," I explained. "I went up to his room."

"I trust so far that everything is going on satisfactorily?" she inquired, raising her eyes to mine.

I did not answer her at once. I was engaged in marvelling at the wonderful pallor of her cheeks.

"So far as I am concerned, I think so," I said. "Forgive me, Lady Angela," I added, "but I think that you must have walked too far this morning. You are very pale."

"I am tired," she admitted.

There was a lounge close at hand. She moved slowly towards it, and sat down. There was no spoken invitation, but I understood that I was permitted to remain with her.

"Do you know," she said, looking round to make sure that we were alone, "I dread these meetings of the Council. I have always the feeling that something terrible will happen. I knew Lord Ronald very well, and his mother was one of my dearest friends. I am sure that he was perfectly innocent. And to-day he is in a madhouse. They say that he will never recover."

I did not wish to speak about these things, even with Lady Angela. I tried to lead the conversation into other channels, but she absolutely ignored my attempt.

"There is something about it all so grim, mysterious," she said. "It seems almost as though there must be a traitor, if not in the Council itself, in some special and privileged position."

She looked up at me as though asking for confirmation of her views. I shook my head.

"Lady Angela," I said, "would you mind if I abstained from expressing any opinion at all? It is a subject which I feel it is scarcely right for me to discuss."

She looked at me with wide-open eyes, a dash of insolence mingled with her surprise. I do not know what she was about to say, for at that moment the young man with the sombre shooting suit and closely cropped hair paused for a moment on his way out of the breakfast-room. He glanced at me, and I received a brief impression of an unwholesome-looking person with protuberant eyeballs, thin lashes, and supercilious mouth.

"I trust that the day's entertainment will include something more than a glimpse of Lady Angela," he said, with a low bow.

She raised her eyes. It seemed to me, who was watching her closely, that she shrank a little back in her seat. I was sure that she shared my instinctive dislike of the man.

"I think not," she said. "Perhaps you are expecting me to come down with the lunch and compliment you all upon your prowess."

"It would be delightful!" he murmured.

She shook her head.

"There are too many of you, and I am too few," she said lightly. "Besides, shooting is one of the few sports with which I have no sympathy at all. I shall try and get somewhere away from the sound of your guns."

"I myself," he said, "am not what you call a devotee of the sport. I wonder if part of the day one might play truant. Would Lady Angela take pity upon an uncertained guest?"

"I should find it a shocking nuisance," she said, coolly. "Besides, it would not be allowed. You will find that when my father has once marshalled you, escape is a thing not to be dreamed of. Every one says that he is a perfect martinet where a day's shooting is concerned."

He smiled enigmatically.

"We shall see," he remarked, as he turned away.

Lady Angela watched him disappear.

"Do you know who that is?" she asked me.

I shook my head.

"Some one French, very French," I remarked.

"He should be," she remarked. "That is Prince Henri de Malors. He represents the hopes of the Royalists in France."

"It is very interesting," I murmured. "May I ask is he an old family friend?"

"Our families have been connected by marriage," she answered. "He and Blenavon saw a great deal of one another in Paris, very much to the disadvantage of my brother, I should think. I believe that there was some trouble at the Foreign Office about it."

"It is very interesting," I repeated.

"Blenavon was very foolish," she declared. "It das obviously a most indiscreet friendship for him, and Paris was his first appointment. But I must go and speak to some of these people."

She rose and left me a little abruptly. I escaped by one of the side entrances, and hurried back to my cottage.

CHAPTER XII.

AN ACCIDENT.

The Prince accepted my most comfortable easy chair with an air of graceful condescension. Lady Angela had already seated herself. It was late in the afternoon, and Grooton was busy in the room behind, preparing my tea.

"The Prince did not care to shoot to-day," Lady Angela explained, "and I have been showing him the neighbourhood. Incidentally, I am dying for some tea, and the Prince has smoked all his cigarettes."

The Prince raised his hand in polite expostulation, but he accepted a cigarette with a little sigh of relief.

"You have found a very lonely spot for your dwelling house, Mr. Ducaine," he said. "You English are so fond of solitude."

"It suits me very well," I answered, "for just now I have a great deal of work to do. I am safely away from all distractions, here."

Lady Angela smiled at me.

"Not quite so safe, perhaps, Mr. Ducaine, as you fondly imagined," she remarked. "I am afraid that we disturbed you. You look awfully busy."

She glanced towards my writing-table. It was covered with papers, and a map of the southern counties leaned up against the wall. The Prince also was glancing curiously in the same direction.

LARGEST STEAMER IN THE WORLD

Launch of the White Star Line's Triple Screw S. S. "Olympic" at Belfast, Ireland

BELFAST, OCT. 20.—The White Star Line's giant steamer "Olympic" was launched successfully to-day. As fifty thousand spectators watched the monster hull glide swiftly down the ways, the Countess of Aberdeen, wife of the Viceroy of Ireland, christened the ship. The "Olympic" is the largest steamer now afloat.

The White Star Line's triple-screw steamer "Olympic" exceeds by nearly 100 feet in length and 13,000 tons any other ship afloat. Her principal dimensions are:

	Feet.
Length over all	882½
Breadth over all	92½
Breadth over boat deck	94
Height from bottom of keel to boat deck	97
Height from bottom of keel to top of Captain's house	105½
Height of funnels above casing	72
Height of funnels above boat deck	81½
Distance from top of funnel to keel	175

Number of steel decks 11
Number of watertight bulkheads 15

The gigantic measurements of this vessel are best appreciated when it is known that in length the "Olympic" overtops the height of the Metropolitan tower in New York by 182 feet, is twice as long as the height o fthe dome of St. Peter's at Rome, and equals in length the total drop of the famous Bridal Veil Fall in the Yosemite Valley. Indeed, if the "Olympic" and her sister vessel, "Titanic" (soon to be launched) were placed end to end under the Brooklyn Bridge, they would completely block the East River, and extend over the shore one hundred feet on each side. It is also interesting to note that the length of each of these ships is four times the height of Bunker Hill Monument.

In each ship three million steel rivets, weighing in all 1,200 tons, have been employed to bind the massive steel plates, insuring the greatest stability; and the rudder of each vessel weighs 100 tons, yet will be moved by electricity almost as lightly as a feather.

These monsters of the deep will each accommodate 2,500 passengers, carrying a crew of 860, and, because of the enormous size of the ships the accommodations, both as regards the several public apartments and the passenger staterooms, will be exceptionally spacious, while the beauty and luxury of the appointments will surpass anything hitherto attempted. Special attractions, such as Turkish and electric bath establishments, swimming pools, tennis courts, sun parlours, sports decks and palm courts, will be provided in addition to restaurants, dining saloons, lounges, smoking-apartments, elevators, etc., all of which will add much to the pleasure of a voyage on these marvels of marine achievement.

The "Olympic" and "Titanic" will be propelled by a unique combination of reciprocating engines with a low-pressure turbine, such as the White Star Line has employed so successfully on its Canadian Service steamer "Laurentic." By this ingenious system vibration is eliminated, and mal-de mer conquered. A speed of 22 knots per hour will be maintained.

Since the advent of the "Great Eastern" in 1858 no steamer has created such general interest as the "Olympic," not only on account of her surpassing size, but also because of the immense forward steps thus marked in other lines of marine accomplishment, the outcome of many centuries of conflict with the sea.

The "Olympic" will join the White Star Line's mail service between New York, Plymouth, Cherbourg, and Southampton next summer, followed by the "Titanic" in the early fall.

SHOOTS HIS SISTER --A BRIDE--THEN HE KILLS HIMSELF

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, OCT. 25.—Wilhelm Meyer, thirty-two years old, a clerk in the grocery of O. H. Self at No. 5901 Third Avenue, Bay Ridge, shot his sister, Mrs. Ludwig Erdmann, at her home in Ridgefield Park, N.J., yesterday morning and then fired a bullet into his own brain.

Death in his case was instantaneous. Mrs. Erdmann was removed to the Hackensack Hospital with a bullet in her neck. Her condition is critical.

Meyer was unusually devoted to his sister and had opposed her marriage to Erdmann, a widower with three children. Following the wedding three weeks ago Meyer did not know where Erdmann and his bride had gone and he did not find them until yesterday morning.

Mrs. Erdmann and her nine-year-old stepson, Joseph, were in the kitchen when Meyer walked in. He began to upbraid his sister, but just what was said the little boy cannot tell. He heard his uncle exclaim:

"Then I will fix you," and a shot was fired. It missed Mrs. Erdmann and she grabbed her brother by the wrist. He wrestled her to the floor, and, putting the revolver to her neck, fired a second shot.

"I was frightened and couldn't move," said little Joseph. "I had turned around again to look at mother when Uncle Will shot himself in the head."

Mrs. Erdmann staggered out of the house and was cared for by neighbors. She was able to make only a brief statement to Chief of Police Encker, and Dr. Lanstreth ordered that she be kept quiet.

Erdmann, who is employed by the Baumgarten Contracting Company in Manhattan, was notified of the tragedy and hurried home. He is forty years old, and the oldest of his children is Margaret, aged sixteen years. Margaret was upstairs at the time of the shooting, and fainted on the stairway. Coroner Tracey decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

FOR THE PUBLIC

New Formula Cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis and Hoarseness in Five Hours.

Much is being done in these days to stop the ravages of consumption, but probably nothing has been so effective as teaching the public how to break up a cold and cure coughs, bronchitis, tonsilitis, etc., with simple home-mixed medicine. A laxative cough syrup, free from whiskey is the prime need. A cough indicates inflammation and congestion and these in turn are due to an excess of waste and poison in the system. A tonic laxative cough syrup rids the system of congestion, while relieving the painful coughing. Get the following and mix at home: One ounce fluid wild cherry bark, one ounce compound essence cardiol and three ounces syrup white pine compound. Shake the bottle and take twenty drops every half hour for four hours. Then one-half to one teaspoonful three or four times daily. Give children less, according to age. Cut this out and save it for some friend.

In Sudden Emergencies

Like illness, it is often necessary quickly to raise the temperature of a room. For instance, in those hours between midnight and dawn, when the day temperature has been allowed to drop, if you are called upon to get up, the room is chilly and cold. It takes a long time to start up a furnace or fire and raise the temperature by ordinary means.

You can instantly heat a room to any desired temperature with a

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

It quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. Has automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back, so the wick can be cleaned in an instant. It has a cool handle and a damper top.

An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. It has a filler-cap which does not need to be screwed down; it is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking.

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in Japan or nickel. It is strong, durable and well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

OF course you heard the scandal about Mr. Latimer and Mrs. Rice?"

"No, what?"

"Why, he has been staying right down near the Rice's cottage and going about everywhere with Mrs. Rice, sailing and driving and riding. Everybody is talking about them. I guess Mr. Rice is the only person in the settlement who doesn't know what's going on. That's the way it always is, you know, the last person in town to know about a scandal is the woman's husband. But, my dear, I don't see how that can be news to you. I told your sister, Marcia, all about it yesterday."

"Marcia! Well, you might as well expect me to hear of it by your telling it to that lamp-post and there. Anything like that always stops with her."

All of which conversation, to which I chanced to be a casual listener, I have repeated that I may say, "Three cheers for Marcia!"

Can you think of any prouder praise than her sister's complaint, "Anything like that always stops with her."

I can't.

Not long ago I met, twice in the same week, a young married man and a young woman, to whom he had been very attentive before his marriage, together in a city several miles from their home.

When I came home my natural impulse, of course, was to speak of what I had seen. Several times I actually had my mouth open to say, "Whom do you think I saw in R— today?" And then I thought of what I admired in Marcia, and closed it.

Later I chanced to find out that the presence of these two in the city was absolutely innocent, that they were there on an errand of kindness, and that the wife knew and entirely approved.

And, as you can imagine, I was very thankful to Marcia.

Suppose I had told what I saw and had let the story be passed on with the inevitable addition of innuendo and suspicion. For, even if the truth had started to pursue the scandal half an hour afterwards, it would probably never have caught up with the mistake.

At a social affair recently I had a chance to see a sort of cross section of a rumor in process of growth.

"Eleanor is sick," someone said to me.

I had reasons for thinking that a mistake, so I set out to trace the information to its source, and this is what I found:

That someone had said, "Where is Eleanor?"

That someone else had answered, "Why, she isn't here. Isn't that queer? She always comes. She must be ill."

That the next time Eleanor's whereabouts were in question, someone had glibly explained, "Why, Eleanor is ill."

Do you want to be a party to passing on rumours oftentimes as ill-founded as this one?

Or do you want to be Marcia's kind?

Which?

YOUNG MAN CHARGED WITH THEFT WAS COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

Five Cases in the Police Court This Morning—Four Drunks Paid Fines of $5.85 Each.

AMUSING EVIDENCE

There was a full house at the police court this morning. The prisoners marched up one after the other until the prisoners' box was full, and the ones who followed looked a little bewildered. They did not know where they ought to go. Four drunk and disorderly cases were on the list, and all pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $5.85, increasing the city treasury by $23.40.

Fred Sullivan was next called. He appeared in the police court on October the 20th charged with entering the store of James Edgar on the night of Oct. 6th, and taking therefrom a quantity of tobacco, cigars and gum, etc., to the value of $25.00 and was remanded until today, the 27th. He elected to be tried by a jury at the assizes. However, the evidence in connection with the case was heard. Mr. Edgar gave evidence first.

"You keep a store on George street," asked the Magistrate.

"Yes, your Worship," said the witness.

"On the night of Oct. 6th, did you lock up your store yourself?"

"I am not certain of that."

"How was the store entered?"

"A square of glass was removed from a window in the cellar measuring 11 in. x 17 in."

"How was glass removed?"

"The putty was removed and the pane was taken out of the sash."

"When did you discover it?"

"Next morning your Worship."

"What did you miss?"

"Some empty tobacco, gum and cigar boxes were lying on the floor and some candles were taken."

"To what extent?"

"About $30 worth as near as we could figure."

"You say there were empty boxes of tobacco, cigars and gum on the floor?"

"Yes, they were empty."

"Did you discover the property taken?"

"Yes, in the old City hotel."

"Where?"

"At first it was in the oven of an old range."

"Who discovered it?"

"Mr. Lang and Mr. Wilson, contractors."

"They drew your attention to it?"

"Yes."

"Do you remember the date?"

"It would be on the following Wednesday."

"You saw the goods there?"

"Yes."

"Did you recognize them?"

"Yes."

"How?"

"By the brand. It was the same as we keep on hand."

"Did they correspond with your goods?"

"Yes. We found tobacco, cigars and pepsin gum of the kind we keep in stock. The tobacco was the Labour King brand."

"What were they found in?"

"In an apron and bag."

"Did you recognize it as taken from your shop."

"Yes."

"On Wednesday, the 12th, did anything happen to the goods in the oven?"

"Yes. On the 12th I was looking out of my window, which commands a view of the hotel yard, and about 12.30 I saw a young man come out of Mr. Pappas' pool room by the back door into the yard and cross over to where the stove was. He first tried a window and it would not work. He then tried the door and it opened. He went in and after staying two or three minutes, came out again."

"What with?"

"I did not see him carrying anything. He went into the pool room again and my brother and I went and discovered that the goods had been removed from the oven. I called Mr. Newhall up and I think he was there also."

The chief then asked Mr. Edgar if he had seen the man since, or if he would recognize him.

Mr. Edgar replied that he would.

Mr. Dumble then asked if the prisoner was the man.

"Yes," answered Mr. Edgar.

Then Mr. Dumble proceeded.

"When was the next time you saw the goods?"

"I did not see them."

"Did you hear of them?"

"Yes, Mr. Newhall told me that the goods had been found."

"Did you go to see them?"

"No."

"Have you any mark on them by which you could prove them as belonging to you?"

"No, but there is no one else in the city who handles that brand of tobacco."

At this juncture the goods were produced.

"Do you recognize the cigars as the ones taken from your store?"

"Yes."

"How do you know?"

"By the little wooden pegs through them."

"I suppose when a man is drunk, those little pegs help to keep the cigar in his mouth. Does anyone else handle that brand down?"

"No."

Mr. Edgar proved the cost of the goods produced by the said accused, and His Worship continued.

"Did your brother discover the robbery first?"

"Yes."

"Is he able to be here?"

"No. He met with an accident the night before last and cannot attend."

Mr. Edgar was then released from the witness box and P. C. Meagher took the stand. He gave evidence much the same as that of Mr. Edgar. He also stated that he had found tracks in the yard and had preserved one at the window. He poured plaster into it and took a print. He also said that he took the prisoner's boot after he had been arrested and it fitted in the print exactly. P. C. Meagher then told his story.

"When the goods were transferred they were put in a pit about 20 yards distant with tins piled on top of them. He came up to me on Simcoe street and said, 'Is that right that so and so are arrested on a charge of burglary.' I said yes and you also. On the way to the station he said, 'What job have you got me in?' I said 'Keep your mouth closed, Murphy, until we get into the chief's office.' In the office afterward he admitted to me that he had removed the stuff. He said, 'They can't put me down for burglary when I didn't do it. They can only have me arrested for receiving stolen goods.' I then stepped away and hid. Two men came in and asked if any of the police were about. He said that they were not around, that they had gone after some other guys. A clergyman then came in and asked him what he was in for and he answered that he was in for being drunk and disorderly. After these men had gone out, the prisoner called to another prisoner, 'Say they got me pretty slick on this job. Anyway they can only have me for receiving stolen property.'"

"The case will come up before a jury," said his Worship.

ALIMONY ACTION IS SETTLED

Brought By Mrs. Mary M. Appleby, Formerly of Peterborough

Special to The Examiner.

Toronto, Oct. 27.—Mrs. Mary M. Appleby's motion for an order directing that one-third of the $9,225, received by her husband, A. B. Appleby, from the sale of property to the Canadian Northern Railway, be set apart as security for her dower, and that her alimony arrears be paid from the remainder, did not come before Mr. Justice Clute in Single Court this morning.

The case was struck off the list, but it was stated later that a settlement had been arrived at.

Mrs. Appleby lives in Philadelphia. She is 49 years old and has lived apart from her husband since April 9, 1909. In her affidavit, she says that on June 21st, 1907, Judge Benson of Cobourg allowed her $65 a month alimony.

Mrs. Appleby claims $357.41 costs, alimony amounting to $975, and $74.48 for other items.

WORKING UP EVIDENCE

Edward and Thomas Jardine Arraigned in Connection With the Murder of Lizzie Anderson—An Adjournment Made for a Week.

ARE INDIFFERENT

Special Wire to the Examiner.

GODERICH, OCT. 27. Edward Jardine, charged with murdering Lizzie Anderson, his brother Thomas, charged with being an accessory, were arraigned before Magistrate Butler last evening. Barrister Dancey asked for a week's adjournment. This morning both prisoners ate heartily, but maintained an attitude of stolid indifference. A detective is working up evidence.

SHOT FOR WHISTLING

Special wire to The Examiner.

FORT WILLIAM, OCT. 27. Provincial and railroad police are scouring the country for Joseph Cionzonio, the Italian who shot and killed Tom Waugh, a Scotchman, because he would not stop whistling. Both men belonged to a construction gang.

KILLED IN THE FOOTBALL GAMES

Special to The Examiner.

ST. LOUIS, OCT. 24.—Ralph Wilson, right half-back of the Wabash, Ind., College, is dead, and two St. Louisans are seriously injured as the first toll of "returned" football in this city. All of the accidents occurred in "mass plays," which the new rules are said to have obviated.

Wilson, a crack player of the Indiana Little Giants, was injured soon after making a brilliant run and scoring the first touchdown for his team in its battle with St. Louis University on the local grounds Saturday. He was picked up dazed.

The cost of the "mass play" to bone and blood was further exemplified in semi-scholastic games yesterday. The injured men were Charles Schiller, broken leg, and J. Weyman, probable concussion of the brain. Both men were hurt while opposing teams were locked together in a swaying mass.

Schiller was playing a line position on the West End Club team against the St. Charles Athletic Club at West End Park, St. Charles. In the first half, when the mass disentangled, Schiller was found unconscious on the ground.

While playing right guard for the Colonial Athletic Club against the Belleville Tigers, Wegman was caught in a smash and made unconscious.

TIRED, ACHING FEET

How annoying to have the feet tired and aching, sore and chafed about the time you want to take a good long walk. You can get a world of comfort by using Dr. Chase's Ointment when the feet give you trouble. It heals and soothes the skin, leaves it soft and natural and prevents corns and bunions.

HE WAS PARALYZED

Mr. William J. Brennan, Western Hill, St. Catharines, Ont., tells what it feels like to be paralyzed. He lost power of speech, face was drawn out of shape, lost flesh, could not sleep. Five doctors failed to help him. Electricity proved ineffective. He used Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food until his former good health was restored. Face was restored to shape, power of speech returned and he gained in weight. Says he would not return to former condition for all the gold in the country.

HARRY ADAMS

Elevator Made A Cell For Supposed Robber

NEW YORK, OCT. 25—One way of holding a man prisoner until the police should arrive was demonstrated last night by the elevator man in the American Tract Society Building at No. 150 Nassau Street. A man, who ran breathlessly down the stairs, shouted to the elevator man that he had been robbed on the third floor of the building.

Soon after that the elevator man ran his car up to the third floor and invited the alleged robber to get aboard. The person did so. Then the car began its descent. But it halted at a point above the second floor, where it was impossible for the passenger to get off.

The accused was David Rothchild, a salesman for a shoe concern in Greenwich Street. He was walking from the store last night up Nassau Street on his way to his home at No. 50 Patchen Avenue, Brooklyn, when a young man stopped him and insisted that he take a drink. He declined. The stranger continued to follow him.

At the Tract Society Building Rothchild, who says he was frightened, darted in and ran up to the third floor. The stranger followed. On that floor, Rothchild says, the stranger throttled him and took about $25 from his pocket.

Rothchild ran to the ground floor and asked the elevator man not to let anyone out of the building. Rothchild, who is middle-aged, then went to the street and yelled "Police!" Patrolmen Powers and Conlan ran up and with Rothchild entered the building.

"Elevator!" shouted the policemen, kicking at the door of the shaft.

Instantly the car shot down to the ground. When the door was opened from the inside the elevator man indicated another person with him in the car.

"Here's your prisoner, gentlemen," he said, politely.

The policemen searched the captive and found in his pockets $19.90. On the third floor they found a $5 bill. Rothchild said the total amount corresponded with what he had had in his pockets, and he charged the stranger with the theft of the money.

In the Oak Street police station the prisoner said he was James Costello a chauffeur of No. 239 Holliday Street, Jersey City. He was locked up.

Lad Was Drowned As Mother Had Dreamed

Special to the Examiner.

NEW YORK, OCT 25. The dream of Mrs. James Clarkin has been strangely and pathetically verified. The body of James, her eight-year-old son, was found last evening in the North River near the foot of West Seventy-sixth Street.

Last Monday morning the little fellow mounted a delivery wagon in front of his home at No. 26 Amsterdam Avenue and went for a ride. The driver stopped for him to alight at Sixty-third Street. He said he was going to see his aunt, who lives nearby here, but he did not call upon her and never returned home.

His mother, who is in deep distress over his disappearance, for he was her favorite child, told next morning how during the night she had dreamt that her boy was drowned.

"It seemed to me," she said, "that I was awake, and I heard my little Jimmy calling for me. 'Marm! marm! marm!' he cried, 'come and get me, marm.' It was not a real voice calling me. It was a voice from the grave, and I knew my boy was drowned."

Joseph Tucker, master of the coal barge June, caught sight of the dead child as the body floated down on the stream. He took the body aboard the barge and at the foot of West 79th Street notified Patrolman George Evans.

The policeman had read of the mother's dream and at once suspected that the body was that of little James Clarkin. Later the father identified it.

The boy was found wearing neither shoes nor stockings. It is that fact which makes the police suppose he tried to go wading near the recreation pier at the foot of West Fifty-first Street.

HOW OLD PEOPLE

May Prolong Their Lives

At an advanced age waste is more rapid than repair. The organs act more slowly and less effectually than in youth. The circulation is poor—the blood thin and watery — the appetite poor and digestion weak.

We want to say to every aged person in this vicinity that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, will prolong life. It creates an appetite, aids digestion and makes good blood. In this natural manner Vinol retards waste and replaces weakness with strength, giving new life to this worn system.

If people in this vicinity only realized how Vinol invigorates old people we would not be able to supply the demand.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WEDDING BELLS

BUTLER—BULLOCK.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 26, the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bullock, "Villa Dells," Otonabee, was the scene of a quiet, but pretty wedding, when the marriage of their daughter, Eva Ethel, to Mr. Bertram J. Butler of Calgary, Alta., was solemnized; the Rev. J. G. Brown of St. James' church, Peterborough, being the officiating clergyman. The bride was given away by her father. She wore a handsome gown of ivory Duchess satin on frame, with yoke and sleeves of filled lace, and the customary veil of tulle, arranged with bliss of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of white carnations. The bride's little brother, Almont, and her little cousin, Ferna Cooper, both daintily dressed in white, carried the ring in a basket of roses. The preceded the bridal party, who entered the drawing room to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march played by Miss Clara Sisler of the bride, and stood under a beautiful arch of evergreens and roses. Mr. and Mrs. Butler will leave for their future home in Calgary, Alta. The bride's travelling dress is a tailor costume of green chiffon broadcloth, with large black hat. Among the many beautiful presents received was a set of mink furs, the gift of the bride's mother, and a handsome check from her father. Presents were received from Vancouver, B.C., Spokane, Wash., and Manitoba, testifying the esteem in which the young couple are held by their many friends.

IDEA FOR WOMEN

Tells How Radiant Hair Can Easily Adorn Any Head

It's a mighty good thing for the women of Canada that Parisian Sage can now be obtained in every town of consequence.

No preparation for the hair has done so much to stop falling hair and eradicate dandruff and make women's hair beautiful as Parisian Sage.

Parisian Sage is the only certain destroyer of the dandruff microbe which is the cause of 90 per cent. of hair trouble.

These pernicious, persistent and destructive little devils thrive on the ordinary hair tonics.

Parisian Sage is such an extraordinary and quick acting rejuvenator that Wm. Madill, who is the agent in Peterborough, guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

Parisian Sage is most daintily perfumed, it is an ideal preparation, not sticky or glossy.

It is a magnificent dressing for women who desire luxuriant, lustrous hair that compels admiration.

Get a large bottle of Parisian Sage and only 50 cents at Wm. Madill's and at leading druggists all over Canada. The girl with the auburn hair is on every package. Made in Canada by Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont., who fill mail orders, all charges prepaid.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Doing Great Work in Saskatchewan

Mrs Emel Carlson Tells How Quickly and Completely They Cured Her Kidney Trouble.

Colonsay, Sask., Oct. 26—(Special.)—No remedy has done as much for the wheat growers of Saskatchewan as Dodd's Kidney Pills. They occupy a place in the family medicine chest on nearly every farm, and every day brings fresh evidence of the great work they are doing. One of the latest to sing their praises in this neighbourhood is Mrs. Emel Carlson. Here is what she is telling her many friends:

"For about two years I was sorely troubled with Kidney Disease brought on by a sprain. My heart bothered me. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I was always tired and nervous. The least exertion would cause me to perspire freely and my perspiration had an unpleasant odour.

Make them right with Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me. They are certainly the best medicine I ever used."

If you have any of Mrs. Carlson's symtoms your kidneys are wrong. Make them right with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Recipe for 16 Ounces of Cough Syrup

No Better Remedy at any Price. Fully Guaranteed.

Make a plain syrup by mixing two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of pure Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup. This gives you a family supply of the best cough syrup at a saving of $2. It never spoils. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

The effectiveness of this simple remedy is surprising. It seems to take hold instantly, and will usually stop the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. It tones up the jaded appetite and is just laxative enough to be helpful in a cough, and has a pleasing taste. Also excellent for bronchial trouble, throat tickle, sore lungs and asthma, and an unequalled remedy for whooping cough.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) is a prime favorite in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, though never successfully. If you try it, use only genuine Pinex, which is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this recipe.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

TRIES TO PLAY BLACK HAND GAME ON JOHN C. EATON, OF TORONTO

Head of Toronto Departmental Store Gets a Letter From a So-Called Black Hand Society Demanding $200 on Pain of Death.

WAS UNSUCCESSFUL

Head of Toronto Departmental Store Gets a Letter From a So-Called Black Hand Society Demanding $200 on Pain of Death—He Deposits the Money and Detectives Catch Their Man.

Toronto, Oct. 27.—Admitting the authorship of a letter threatening death and destruction to the life and property of J. C. Eaton and his family, and the receipt of $200 secreted as directed by his letter, James Edward McCauley, 22 years of age, an electrical engineer, formerly employed by the city and the Hydro-Electric Commission, was arrested yesterday afternoon by the city police, aided by the King Edward Hotel authorities and operatives of the Thiel Detective Agency, in the rotunda of the hotel after hours of watching. He is charged with demanding money with menaces from Mr. Eaton and may be further charged with extortioning it, as the money placed was real cash. The penalty for the offences carries with it life sentence as a maximum. T. C. Robinette, K.C., will appear in court to-day, for Mr. Eaton, to assist Crown Attorney Corley in the prosecution.

This is what the letter said:

"Mr. Eaton: By the statutes of our organization, I swear by the holy diety and saints to demand and receive $200 from you or ruin your household and family or yourself by shooting the first one handy or dynamitting your house or yacht when your family are on board. So help my God I do this if you don't give us the money or tell the police who make trouble. We stay in this town till we get $5,000. We give you a week to get ready. Put it next Wednesday in the closet of the King Edward Hotel in the southeast corner, on behind a loose ferrule on the ventilator pipe about 2 o'clock.

(Signed) "Black Hand Society."

It was written on yellow night lettergram paper and scrawled in pencil, and was received through the mails on Monday morning by Mr. Eaton. It was addressed in pencil upon an hotel envelope to "Mr. J. C. Eaton, 121 Walmer road, Toronto."

Mr. Eaton immediately consulted with Mr. Robinette and the matter was laid before Chief of Police Grasett, who turned it over to Acting Inspector of Detectives Alex. Mackie. It was then arranged that the money should be placed as directed.

Suspicion rested upon employes of the hotel, and so, when Detective McKinney was detailed to the case, he hesitated about appearing in the vicinity of the appointed place, as all the city officers are well-known. So the Thiel services was called for two operatives, and they took their place opposite the designated compartment. House Detective Smith of the hotel staff was on watch just ouside the lavatory door, and Detective McKinney waited closely in Colborne street. It was arranged that when anyone went into the compartment, one Thiel man should follow him when he left, while the other hurried to the spot to see if the money had been taken.

Scarcely had Mr. Eaton emerged from the place where he personally secreted the money between the loose ferrule and the wall, than a young man entered, remained a few moments and left hurriedly. The Thiel man followed and gave the signal that he had been in, but the other man had no time to let Smith know whether or not the money had been taken. The man went out the rear entrance, and was followed east on Colborne street by McKinney. The gentleman, when apprehended, did not hesitate to be searched, and this was done at the Clyde Hotel. Nothing was found, and upon McKinney's return to the hotel he found that the money was still there.

You Can See How It Heals

No Question or Doubt as to the healing power of

Dr. Chase's Ointment

To people who have used internal treatment in an effort to cure eczema it is almost beyond belief what benefit can be obtained by a few applications of this soothing, healing ointment.

It is seldom that the cause of eczema can be determined, but one thing is certain, the itching must be stoped and the sores healed up.

These results are secured by the use of Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment. The itching is relieved almost instantly, and you will be surprised at the healing which will take place overnight.

A little patience and persistent treatment with Dr. Chase's Ointment will give you more practical and definite results than a whole lot of dosing with internal medicines. You can see how the Ointment heals. The other is guesswork.

Mr. Geo. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "I wish to communicate to you the great benefit I received from using Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment. For years I suffered with a great skin disease on my head, a sort of eczema. I tried four doctors, giving each a fair trial; but got no better. In fact, the disease spread to my left arm.

"I saw Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised and began using it. Persistent use of this treatment has entirely cured me, and I give you a statement of my case with pleasure, as I hope thereby to induce some other sufferer to try the same Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Because this ointment has made its world-wide reputation by curing the most severe and long-standing cases of eczema and piles is no reason why you should overlook its scores of uses in the relief of itching and irritation of the skin.

The big sporting events of Thanksgiving Day are the Examiner road races in the morning and the rugby game between Peterborough Collegiate and the Jarvis street Collegiate of Toronto at Riverside Park in the afternoon. The Toronto team is a big husky outfit, who will undoubtedly take a lot of beating and the games should be well worth seeing. The local team has been practising industriously since their last game and are in fine shape for Monday's battle.

GORHAM IS FOUND GUILTY

forwards. Another night he tried to walk out of a window, thinking it was a door. He was drunk on that occasion."

The witness was put through a severe cross examination by Crown Prosecutor Meredith, especially in regard to the position of her brother and Officer Meharry in the field at the time of the shooting. She reiterated her statement that Meharry was not in a direct line between the kitchen door and the house, but although pressed by the Crown Prosecutor could not say how far he was out of line.

"Can you say whether he was one foot or ten feet out of line?" asked Mr. Meredith.

"No I cannot say, replied the witness.

Another Sister Heard.

Mamie Gorham, a younger sister of the prisoner, was the next witness called. She testified that she was eighteen years of age, and had always lived at home. She corroborated the testimony of the previous witness as to her brother's conduct before the shooting. The witness contradicted Captain White's statement that the prisoner had threatened to blow his brains out. Capt. White was not in the house when the prisoner came downstairs and there was no such threats made. The prisoner, fired a shot into the ceiling as he left the house. She corroborated the evidence of other witnesses as to the prisoner shooting a tea cup. She did not hear her mother reprimand the prisoner for drinking. As regards the shooting her testimony was the same as that of her sister She was certain that Officer Meharry stood near the oak tree in the field and not at the elm trees. Her brother came into the house after the shooting, carrying a cat in his arms. The witness stated that when he saw the officers coming down the track to the house he had said, "Wait and you will see some fun." Then he had left the house, taking the rifle with him.

Her brother had been very queer. He seldom ate his meals with the rest of the family and was cruel to animals. She had not seen him drunk very often. That day he seemed to be drunk and crazy. She had noticed him frothing at the mouth several times. She had seen him using a revolver quite frequently before. He was a good shot.

The witness was cross-examined at some length by Mr. Meredith.

To the Crown Prosecutor witness said that no one had spoken to her about what Captain White had sworn to. She had not known what Capt. White had said in the witness box.

The Prisoner at School.

Sister Mary Ste. Edward was the last witness called at the afternoon session. She recognized the prisoner. She had been principal of the Lake street Separate school, leaving it in 1900 and the prisoner had been a pupil there. He was not in her class but his teacher had occasion to send him to her on account of difficulty in managing him. Sister St. Edward considered that Gorham was mentally defective. He was heedless and inattentive to advice. Punishment had no effect upon him and kindness only a very slight one. The witness had seen him in the gaol since his arrest and testified that she did not consider that he realized his position.

"Do you think that he is fit to be at liberty?" asked Chancellor Boyd.

"No sir," replied the witness. I don't think he was responsible for what he did."

The witness said that she had her opinion as regards Gorham's mental condition confirmed by his actions out of school. She had occasion to visit St. Joseph's Hospital frequently and the prisoner and his sister had often been her companions on the way home after school. The prisoner used to act in a most reckless manner when crossing the C.P.R. bridge, running almost under trains and performing similar fact, regardless of her commands or those of his sister.

The court adjourned at 5.50 o'clock until 9.30 this morning.

This Morning's Session.

Sister Mary St. Davis was the first witness called by the defence at this morning's session of the Gorham trial. She corroborated the evidence of Sister St. Edward as to the conduct and actions of the prisoner, while a pupil at the Lake Street school. Neither corporal punishment nor moral suasion had any effect. She had decided when Gorham first came to school that he was mentally deficient. He had a sort of idiotic laugh when punished.

To Mr. Meredith, the witness said that she had seen Gorham once in prison. Gorham had learned to read and write, but very poorly, so much so that she had no recollection of his being promoted from the primary class. He associated and played with the other boys of the school. He had no strength of character.

"He would know the difference between right and wrong and did not act on it?"

"Apparently he did," was the reply.

John Gorham, the prisoner's oldest brother, was the next witness. He stated that he was not at home on the day of the shooting from 2.30 until 3 the next morning. He saw the prisoner between 2 and 2.30 o'clock on the afternoon in question. He was playing catch with some other boys. Witness had noticed one thing about his brother's conduct, that whenever he did anything that was wrong he did not seem to realize that he should not do so. When spoken to about it, he would only laugh. He was restless at nights and in the morning complained of a sore tongue. He would often talk to objects as if they were animate things. The witness gave instances of this feature of his brother's conduct. He had a recollection of his frothing at the mouth on six different occasions. On four of these occasions he had liquor in him; on the other two he did not think that he had. As far as inflicting bodily punishment on him it would have no effect upon him in the way of subduing him. He corroborated the evidence of the rest of the family as to the prisoner's habit of eating his meals alone. Only four times in the last three years had he had supper with the rest of them. The longest he had ever worked for any one was about a month. Sometimes he would not work for six or nine months.

To Mr. Meredith

Do you mean to tell us that the prisoner did not know what he was saying when he was talking to the family?"

"No, I don't mean to tell the court that."

"He knew right from wrong."

"He did to an extent."

"What do you mean by to an extent?"

"I mean, I think he did not know absolutely."

Witness said that they only had a medical man to examine the prisoner on one occasion.

"You heard how your brother acted on the night your mother was shot. Do you ever remember his behaving himself in that manner before?" asked His Lordship.

The witness stated that on one other occasion he had behaved similarly.

"Do you think he would be safe at home now?"

"No, I do not think so."

Gordon Kellar testified that he had been in Lindsay with the prisoner three days before the shooting. They had gone up to see about a gasoline engine. Gorham was drinking quite a bit. They had returned to Peterborough on the evening of the next day. Gorham was drinking whiskey and gin. On their return to Peterborough they had remained up until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. Witness saw Gorham at noon on the day of the shooting, and saw him later, about 1.30 in the afternoon. The prisoner was helping to cut wood on the old Ashburnham wharf, Erendenburg, Mr. Tobin and the prisoner were drinking. They had a dozen bottles of ale with them. The prisoner was staggering when the witness left at 4.30 o'clock. Witness was at the corner of Maria street and the C. P. R. track when Gorham came out of the house and fired a shot into the air. He had known the prisoner three or four years. He had acted funny when drunk and was cruel to animals. He saw him saturate a cat with coal oil and apply a match to it. Another time he chased a cat around until t lost its mind.

IMPEDIMENT IN SPEECH

DR. E. L. RIVENBURGH, of Chicago
Is Now at Oriental Hotel, Peterborough
Where He Will Remain for a Few Weeks to Cure Those Afflicted With Stammering or Any Form of Impediment in Speech

Stuttering	Nasal Sound	And all Impediments in Speech Where there is no Malformation of the Vocal Organs
Stammering	Improper Articulation
Hesitancy
Lisping	Vocal Afflictions
Suction and Exhausted Breath

TO THE AFFLICTED

My method for the cure of Stammering and all Vocal defects is original and, as I am the author of a book entitled "Stammering, Its Cause and Cure," I claim to thoroughly understand the nature of the voice and the proper method for the practical cultivation of the same. During my past 40 years' practice I have travelled extensively through the Western and Middle States and have been located in Toronto, Canada, for the past two years, and have treated over three thousand patients, all of whom, I am pleased to state, can testify to their permanency of cure.

My method removes the CAUSE of Stammering, and therefore the cure is permanent.

The only SCIENTIFIC and SUCCESSFUL method known and practised.

I WARRANT to cure the worst case of stammering in from one to four weeks time.

If you have tried to be cured and are not, remember I GUARANTEE to cure.

I have made the treatment of STAMMERING and all DEFECTS IN SPEECH A SPECIALTY for the past FORTY YEARS, and have cured over 3,000 cases.

No medicine given or surgical operations performed. No silence, beating time or inflating of the lungs.

My method has never failed. Below may be found testimonials:

Toronto, January 15th, 1910

I have visited the Toronto Institute for the Overcoming of Impediments in Speech, conducted by Dr. Rivenburgh, 505 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, and I saw his processes of dealing with six students who were present. I have personally given a great deal of attention to defects in speech, and the psychological methods of removing them, and I'm glad to be able to state that I believe Dr. Rivenburgh's work is conducted on true Educational principles. JAMES L. HUGHES, Chief Inspector of Schools.

Toronto, Ont., March 5th, 1910.

This is to certify that I have been a very bad stammerer for the past 40 years, at times so bad that I could scarcely utter a word, and as a consequence, I was seriously handicapped in life. I had been under treatment several times, but with little or no success, and had become very sceptical about ever finding a cure. I was however, a short time ago induced to give Dr. Rivenburgh's method a trial, and I am not sorry that I did so, for in a very short time, under his instructions, I found that I could talk and read easily and fluently, and life began to look brighter. I firmly believe that any one, no matter how badly afflicted, may be cured in a very short time if they will follow the doctor's instructions, which are practical and easy to acquire.

Remember, Dr. Rivenburgh will be at the Oriental Hotel, Peterborough, for the next two weeks.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. George Stevenson, of Toronto, and nephew of the late James Stevenson, was in the city last evening.

Among people from outside the city who came to attend the death of the late James Stevenson, ex-M.P., were his son, Mr. Rufus Stevenson, Brazil, Ind., Mrs. F. C. Grenside, Guelph, niece of the deceased, and Mr. Wm. Stevenson, his brother, of Port Hope.

"The cat lost its mind?" queried Mr. O'Connell.

"Yes," replied the witness.

He had seen the prisoner froth at the mouth when he was angry or drunk. The prisoner was a good shot with a revolver; he had seen him shoot birds and rabbits.

Cross examined by Mr. Meredith.

"Were you and your brother and the prisoner ever involved in one charge at the Police Court?"

"Not that I remember."

"You mean to say you don't know,' 'Not that I remember."

The witness was closely questioned about Gorham's drinking in Lindsay.

"He was all right and talked sensibly except when he was drinking?" asked the Crown Prosecutor.

"Yes," said the witness.

"He would froth at the mouth when he was drunk?"

"Yes."

"What about his tongue?"

"He often told me that it was sore."

"He smoked a lot?"

"Yes."

"The sore tongue did not seem to bother him?"

"Not that I noticed."

"Was he sober when you saw him at noon on the day of the shooting?"

"Yes, sir."

"Perfectly sober?"

"Yes."

"When you saw him later, was he sober?"

"He had a few drinks in him."

The witness stated that when he saw Gorham at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the prisoner was staggering.

Leo Dineen testified that he was manager of the George Street Roller Rink. The prisoner frequented the rink when it first opened. The prisoner was disorderly and would not act like a gentleman. He had to be put out on occasions. When the music started he did not seem able to control himself.

"Did he seem to know what he was doing?"

"I would not say that he did."

"This boy behaved just like some others?" asked Mr. Meredith.

"Yes, but none of the rest were troublesome so frequently."

Patrick Lavery testified that he had known the prisoner for some time. He had worked with him in the Geo. Matthews Packing House. The prisoner at one time was playing with other employees and fell a distance of fifteen feet to the ground, alighting on his head and shoulders. He was unconscious for ten or fifteen minutes.

To Mr. Meredith the witness said that Gorham came to work the day after the accident.

Thos. McGinty stated that he had worked with the prisoner a year ago in the McDonald Lumber Company's camp. The prisoner took a kind of a fit one night and fell on the floor. He recovered consciousness after three or four minutes. He had noticed the prisoner acting queerly on some occasions.

To Mr. Meredith the witness said that he did not know the cause of Gorham's fainting.

"There was no frothing at the mouth?"

"I did not notice any."

Alf. J. Cameron, land surveyor, was called to prove a plan of the Gorham house and vicinity, put in by the defence as Exhibit 2.

License Inspector Joseph Stewart testified that Gorham was not on the black list, nor as far as he knew, had there been any talk of it.

Dr. Yoles of Belleville, testified that he had paid considerable attention to weapons and the effect of shots. The accurate range of the revolver produced was 100 feet, but the weapon might shoot 300 or 400 feet. The revolver would have to be discharged at a considerable elevation to come as far as it had in this case.

"It would have been impossible for a revolver to be aimed point blank at an object 50 feet away and carried 242 feet and kill a woman," said the witness.

"A bullet is never heard that comes very close to the body.

Dr. St. Charles stated that he had spent eight years in the insanity work at Mimico, Orillia, and other asylums in Ontario. He had examined the prisoner on October 20th for the purpose of ascertaining his mental condition. He had found from the examination and the history of the case that the prisoner was suffering from epileptic insanity. The prisoner could read and write, but could not pronounce many words of more than six letters. He was able to do small sums in arithmetic. He did not know the rudiments of his religion and when asked where God was, he said, "Up in the air." He did not know who the member of parliament for this district was. He realized that he was being tried for murder, but did not seem to realize the serious position he was in. He couldn't say who the present King of England was. He seemed to have very little knowledge of anything outside his own little narrow sphere. His memory was hazy as to what he had done since leaving school.

Taking all these points in consideration he had no doubt that the boy was suffering from epileptic insanity.

"Is it likely to be permanent?" asked His Lordship.

"Yes."

"Do you think that he knew the nature and quality of the act he is said to have performed?" asked Mr. O'Connell.

"I would think that he did not."

"Will you say that he did not know?"

"Yes, I will say that."

The witness said that all the prisoner's actions on the night in question had been that of an epileptic.

"Is there any doubt in your mind that this is epileptic insanity?"

"There is no doubt."

Chancellor Boyd asked the witness how he accounted for the fact that Gorham had said on the bridge, after the shooting, that he did not want to shoot Newhall and Adams, but wanted to get a shot at Meharry.

The witness explained that the prisoner might have made such a remark apparently conscious, but really not conscious of what he was saying.

Dr. Bruce Smith, Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities, was called by the Crown, in rebuttal. He had been continuously in the asylum service since 1884. He had examined the prisoner on June 17. He found the prisoner able to give fairly intelligent answers as to his parentage, his early life and everyday occurrences of his boyhood. He gave a very good account of his past life. He had examined the prisoner on Monday and Tuesday of the current week. He found his condition very much the same. He has been in custody since May, and has given no evidence of epilepsy.

"The prisoner has been for years morally defective to such an extent that we regard him as belonging to the degenerate class, which includes seven-tenths of those sent to prisons," said the witness.

"Is the prisoner sane, or insane?"

"He is not insane. He would not be regarded as a suitable case for asylum treatment."

He thought Dr. St. Charles had been misled in his opinion in the case. When he had examined Gorham in June he had found him suffering from a smoker's tongue.

Dr. Smith stated that in justice to the prisoner he believed that his condition on the day of the shooting had been caused by over indulgence in alcohol.

The witness was cross-examined at considerable length by Mr. O'Connell.

Dr. Edward Ryan, superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane at Kingston, was the last rebuttal evidence called by the Crown. He testified that he had six hundred patients under his charge. He had examined the prisoner in company with Dr. Smith, and believed that he was defective, degenerate and alcoholic. He thought he knew right from wrong. There was no evidence to show that the prisoner was epileptic. There was a complete absence of memory following an epileptic attack.

To Mr. O'Connell the witness said that the prisoner could not control his act at the time of the shooting.

His Lordship's Charge.

This concluded the evidence and Chancellor Boyd informed the jury that the counsel on each side had agreed not to charge the jury, but had consented to His Lordship's summing up the evidence for them.

His Lordship said that the charge was a most serious one—a murder charge of peculiar quality. If the jury believed the Crown witnesses they had to consider it a case of murder and nothing short of it. According to the Crown witnesses the boy procured a pistol, had loaded and fired it off several times to show that it was loaded. According to the Crown he spoke to Meharry, told him to come over and he would meet him half way, then told him not to come any further, counted one, two, three, levelled his pistol at the officer, fired, and missed the officer and the ball struck his mother. Then later, according to the Crown, he defended himself on the bridge, and said that he had no desire to hurt the other officers, but wanted a shot at Meharry.

On the other hand, if they believed the witnesses for the defence, they would not find a crime of so great a gravity. If they believed the defence, it was a case of man-slaughter. There was no malice, no intention to kill anybody; that he did not aim at Meharry; that his intention was to frighten and not to kill, and that Meharry was not in line with him and the kitchen door.

There was the third point as to the evidence brought before them as to the mental condition of the prisoner. If they believed that the boy was not mentally responsible for his act; did not know what he was doing, then it was their duty to bring in a verdict of acquittal. In this case he would be looked after in some place where he could be kept under supervision.

"In any case the doctors did not think that the prisoner should be hanged. That was not, however, a question for him or the jury, but was for the Executive of the Government to deal with.

The case was given to the jury at 12.56 o'clock.

CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Toronto, Oct. 28.—One thousand brainy, aggressive and vigorous men arrived in Toronto yesterday, and 500 more are expected to-day in connection with the 37th International Young Men's Christian Associations of North America, which opened in Massey Hall this morning.

Preliminary sessions were held yesterday with three crowded departmental meetings and an evening banquet. At the King Edward Hotel, the immigration-industrial section held the boards, while the state and provincial secretaries of North America held a session in St. James' Cathedral Parish House, and the railroad secretaries of the C.P.R., G.T.R., and Boston & Maine lines in the cathedral itself. The athletic instruction department met at Sunnyside last evening.

John Turnbull, chairman of the entertainment committee, has made arrangements for 1,700 in the hotels and apartment houses, and he announces that indications point to all accommodation being taken.

Some of the problems of the lightening and improving the foreign elements who are emigrating to Canada and the United States, were discussed at the conference of the industrial-immigration branch of the international Y.M.C.A. committee yesterday. Canada has been getting the better of the U. S. in the quality of immigrants from Europe, according to a statement issued to the delegates. It stated that "Canada received two Britishers for every one from continental Europe, whereas the U. S. received two Britishers for every 13 persons from continental Europe in 1906." Further, it stated that Canada admitted 1,345,298, or, one to every four of its population, while the U. S. admitted 8,202,376, or, one to every four of its population in the past ten years, and during that period 354,172 migrated to Canada from the U. S., while 237,924 went from this country across the border. Touching the percentage of illiterate immigrants, Canada seems again to have the advantage. One out of every ten coming to this country were illiterate, as against three out of ten on the other side.

CHARLES R. TOWSON,
A Prominent Visitor From New York at the Y.M.C.A. Conference.

Present at the conferences were 11 secretaries from Europe and the British Isles, seven from Canada and 15 from the U. S. There were also five workers from Europe and 34 from Canada and the United States. After all the phases of dealing with the foreign elements—their education and sociological improvement — had been discussed by secretaries from all centres, and classes of work where foreign labor is employed, the following resolutions were passed and sent on to the various international committees:

(1) That the committee approve the complete plan of the united work for emigrants and immigrants which includes rendering service at points of embarkation; en route in the steerage; at ports of landing; en route to destination; at destination.

(2) Commending the progress made, the committee urges special attention to the development of work on board ship as a possible field for efficient service for immigrants.

(3) Realizing the need of standardizing our work, we recommend that the world's committee give special attention to the preparation and distribution of all printed matter for this work in Europe.

(4) Noting with interest the request of the world's committee that attention be given to returning immigrants, who have been in touch with the association in North America, we recommend that the necessary inside consideration be given to the subject, with a view to relating these men to associations in their home countries.

Work For G.T.R. Strikers.

Montreal, Oct. 28.—Another effort is being made to find work for those of the Grand Trunk strikers who have not yet been taken back, and the statement is made that ten per cent. of the men are still unemployed. This matter was the subject of an interview yesterday between Hon. Mackenzie King and General-Manager Hays, and it is understood that the Grand Trunk officials will endeavor to find the missing men.

M'CAULEY ARRAIGNED.

Amateur Blackmailer May Plead Insanity as Defence.

Toronto, Oct. 28.—James Edward McCauley, a large raw-boned youth of 22 years, was arraigned in the Police Court yesterday upon a charge of demanding money by menace from J. C. Eaton by means of a "black hand" letter. He was remanded a week without plea or election.

It is alleged also that he recently rented a transit and tripod from the Consolidated Optical Co., and later pawned them for $12; also that he procured another similar set of instruments a week ago from the Art Metropole and pawned them for $5. He also pawned a camera which belonged to a friend of his, he says.

It is possible that the defence which to be advanced is insanity. He says his father is a farmer living near Markham.

The $200 which was secreted as directed in McCauley's letter and later thrown away by him when arrested, was found by J. L. Birney, 54 Beatrice street, and yesterday returned to the police.

Opposition to Be Represented.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—It is understood that it is to be the intention of the Government to follow the example of the Australian Government and provide officially for the representation of the Parliamentary Opposition at the coronation of King George. The question will come up in the House immediately after the opening of Parliament next month.

It is probable, therefore, that the Dominion of Canada will be represented at the coronation by twenty Liberal members of Parliament, twelve Conservatives, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and the Premiers of the various provinces.

One effect of this will be that the session about to open will be short. Prorogation may be expected not later than May Inciting Spanish Soldiers.

Madrid, Spain, Oct. 28.—The Spanish Government is aroused at the strength of the alleged anti-military campaign of the Socialist, who, it is claimed, are carrying their propaganda into the barracks, with the purpose of inciting the soldiers to revolt. In this movement it is asserted that the Socialists are aided secretly by the Republicans.

As a means of combatting the attack the Government has resorted to court-martial proceedings, and arrested several Socialists for delivering anti-military speeches. It is also considering the matter of asking the Parliament to prosecute several Socialists, arrested for delivering anti-military speeches, and Socialist Deputy Iglesias.

Berlin Canadian Club.

Berlin, Oct. 28.—The president and secretary of the Canadian Club of Toronto, were the speakers at the luncheon of the Canadian Club here last evening. J. F. Mackay's subject was "The Conservation of our Natural Resources." His address was one bristling with significant facts bearing on the work of the National Conservation Commission of which he is a member.

R. D. Fairbourne's address dealt with the general work of the federation of Canadian Clubs.

No World's Fair for New York.

New York, Oct. 28.—The proposal made some months ago that New York City hold a world's fair in 1913 to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the founding of Manhattan Island, was rejected, on the ground of expediency, at a meeting yesterday of the committee of 100 appointed by Mayor Gaynor to look into the matter. It was argued that there would be lack of time to perfect such an immense project, and that the transit facilities were inadequate to meet the demands.

New Woodstock Industry.

Woodstock, Oct. 28.—An agreement was signed yesterday by the industrial committee and the president of the Maximilian Pneumatic Tool Co. of Buffalo, whereby a local company will be organized and manufacturing commenced here. Two hundred hands will be employed the first year. The capital stock will be $100,000.

Snow in Michigan.

Calumet, Mich., Oct. 28.—Northern Michigan is experiencing the first snow of the season. The snow is being driven by a 30-mile gale.

Over three inches of snow fell in two hours. All boats on Lake Superior are seeking shelter, and the steam and electric railway service is demoralized.

Wounded in a Quarrel.

Goderich, Oct. 28.—George Fraser, an Englishman, who was employed by the Canadian Stewart Co. here, is in a critical condition as the result of a quarrel with a fellow-workman, Angus McLeanlan, of Port Albert. McLennan struck Fraser on the skull with a crowbar, cracking his skull.

Sold Liquor to Prescribed Person.

St. Catharines, Oct. 28.—F. J. O'Neill and Frank Addison, two Niagara hotelkeepers, were before Magistrate Carpbell yesterday afternoon, and were fined $20 each for supplying liquor to a prescribed person, high in municipal life at Niagara.

Roosevelt's Birthday.

Oleonville, N.Y., Oct. 28.—Col. Roosevelt was 52 year old yesterday. The colonel's schedule for the day included a long ride by trolley and six speeches, not to mention a few side remarks as the opportunity for them arose.

Year for Running Away.

Guelph, Oct. 28.—One year in the Central Prison, the term to commence from the completion of his present term, on Aug. 9 next, was the sentence imposed by Judge Chadwick yesterday upon Carl Malange, the Pole who recently took French leave from the reformatory farm, and was arrested at Galt.

"We have to have the support of the courts," said Sergeant Lyons, "and while there is no armed guard at the farm to keep the men from running away, they must be made to know that it means longer terms in prison if they do." The Pole, who would only have had to serve out his time till next August, working and living on the farm, will now have to go back to prison life for practically two years.

Will Reparation Be Made.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—The announcement from Winnipeg that Rev. John MacDougal is at Selkirk conferring with the St. Peter's Reserve Indians on behalf of the Dominion Government in regard to the sale of their lands, which caused such a sensation in Parliament last session, when George Bradbury, M.P., told the story, is considered here as forecasting action by the Government.

Some time ago it was stated that unless reparation was made to these Indians the case would be taken into the courts. The initial steps towards this have now been taken, but procedure will be stayed if any indication is shown that justice will be done to these wards of the Government.

Refused to Rescue Crew.

London, Oct. 28.—The crew of the Maine schooner, Florence Leland, Captain George L. Holden and four men, who were picked up by the British steamer Commodore after their craft had been disabled in a storm, arrived at Liverpool yesterday. ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST

Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddler, who sells you upon each of such occasions is as deceptive as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.

Wearing of such will soon result in pain to the eyes and injury to the sight. That there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and one may require a different, specially prescribed lens, is what every slender person, such as you would assist for yourself or a specialist would give you, must at some time prove injurious to one or other of the eye. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and experience necessary to detect the presence of any such condition, and give the lenses to suit. Advice free in the cases of defective vision. Don't be the victim of quack treatment.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"I have finished my work for the day," I said, rising. "If you will permit me, I will put it away."

Grooton brought in tea. The Prince was politely curious as to the subject matter of those closely written sheets of paper.

"You are perhaps interested in literature, Mr. Ducaine," he remarked.

"Immensely," I answered, waving my hand towards my bookshelves.

"But you yourself—you no doubt write?"

"Oh, one tries," I answered, pouring out the tea.

"It may be permitted then to wish you success," he remarked dryly.

"You are very good," I ansfered.

Lady Angela calmly interposed. The Prince ate buttered toast and drank tea with a bland affectation of enjoyment. They rose almost immediately afterwards.

"You are coming up to the house this evening, Mr. Ducaine?" Lady Angela asked.

"I am due there, now," I answered. "If you will allow me, I will walk back with you."

The Prince touched my arm as Lady Angela passed out before us.

"I am anxious, Mr. Ducaine," he said, looking me in the face, "for a few minutes' private conversation with you. I shall perhaps be fortunate enough to find you at home to-morrow."

He did not wait for my answer, for Lady Angela looked back, and he hastened to her side. He seemed in no hurry, however, to leave the place. The evening was cloudy and unusually dark. A north wind was tearing through the grove of stunted firs, and the roar of the incoming sea filled the air with muffled thunder. The prince looked about him with a little grimace.

"It is indeed a lonely spot," he remarked. "One can imagine anything happening here. Did I not hear of a tragedy only the other day—a man found dead?"

"If you have a taste for horrors, Prince," I remarked, "you can see the spot from the edge of the cliff here."

The Prince moved eagerly forward.

"I disclaim all such weakness," he said, "but the little account which I read, or did some one tell me of it? —ah, I forget; but it interested me."

I pointed downwards to where the creek-riven marshes merged into the sands.

"It was there a little to the left of the white palings," I said. "The man was supposed to have been cast up from the sea."

He measured the distance with his eye. I anticipated his remark.

"The tide is only halfway up now," I said, "and on that particular night there was a terrible gale."

"Nevertheless," he murmured, half to himself, "it is a long way. Was the man what you call identified, Mr. Ducaine?"

"No!"

"There were no letters or papers found upon him?"

"None."

The Prince looked at me sharply.

"That," he said softly, "was strange."

"That," he said softly, "was strange. Does it not suggest to you that he may have been robbed?"

"I had not thought of it," I answered. The verdict, I believe, was simply: Found drowned."

"Found drowned," the Prince repeated. "Ah! Found drowned. By-the-bye," he added suddenly, "who did find him?"

"I did," I said coolly.

"You?" The Prince peered at me closely through the dim light. "That is interesting."

"You find it so interesting," I remarked, "that perhaps you could help to solve the question of the man's identity."

He seemed startled.

"I?" he exclaimed. "But, no. Why should you think that?"

I turned to join Lady Angela. He did not immediately follow.

"Why did you bring him?" I asked her softly. "You had some reason."

"He was making inquiries about you," she answered, "secretly and openly. I thought you ought to know, and I could think of no other way of putting you on your guard."

"The Prince of Malora!" I murmured. "He surely would not stoop to play the spy."

She was silent, and moved a step or two farther away from the spot where he still stood as though absorbed. His angular figure was clearly defined through the twilight against the empty background of space. He was on the very edge of the cliff, almost looking over.

"I know very little about him myself," she said hurriedly, "but I have heard the others talk. Lord Chelsford especially. He is a man, they say, with a twofold reputation. He has played a great part in the world of pleasure, almost a theatrical part; but, you know, the French people like that."

"It is true," I murmured. "They love their horses decked in tinsel."

She nodded.

"They say that it is part of a pose and that he has serious political ambitions. He contemplates always some great scheme which shall make him the idol, if only for a day, of the French mob. A day would be sufficient, for he would strike while Prince, be careful," she called out. "Ah!"

We heard a shrill cry, and we saw the Prince sway on the verge of the cliff. He threw up his arms and clutched wildly at the air, but he was too late to save himself. We saw the ground crumble beneath his feet, and with a second cry of despair he disappeared.

Grooton, Lady Angela, and I reached the edge of the cliff at about the same moment. We peered over in breathless anxiety. Lady Angela clutched my arm, and for a moment I did not in the least care what had happened to the Prince.

"Don't be frightened," I whispered. "The descent is not by any means sheer. He can't possibly have got to the bottom. I will clamber down and look for him."

She shuddered.

"Oh, you mustn't," she exclaimed. "It is not safe. How terrible it looks down there!"

I raised my voice and shouted. Almost immediately there came an answer.

"I am here, my friends, in the middle of a bush. I dare not move. It is so dark I cannot see where to put my foot. Can you lower me a lantern, and I will see if I can climb up?"

Grooton hastened back to the cottage.

"I think you will be all right," I cried out. "It is not half as steep as it looks."

"I believe," he answered, "that I can see a path up. But I will wait until the lantern comes."

The lantern arrived almost immediately. We lowered it to him by a rope, and he examined the face of the cliff.

"I think that I can get up," he cried out, "but I should like to help myself with the rope. Can you both hold it tightly?"

"All right," I answered. "We've got it."

He clambered up with surprising agility. But as he reached the edge of the cliff he groaned heavily.

"Are you hurt?" Lady Angela asked.

"It is my foot," he muttered, "my left foot. I twisted it in falling."

Grooton and I helped him to the cottage. He hobbled painfully along with tightly clenched lips.

"I shall have to ask for a pony cart to get up to the house, I am afraid," he said. "I am very sorry to give you so much trouble, Mr. Ducaine."

"The trouble is nothing," I answered, "but I am wondering how on earth you managed to fall over the cliff."

"I myself, I scarcely know," he answered, as he sipped the brandy which Grooton had produced. "I am subject to fits of giddiness, and one came over me as I stood there looking down. I felt the ground sway, and remember no more. I am very sorry to give you all this trouble, but indeed I fear that I cannot walk."

"We will send you down a cart," I declared. "You will have rather a rough drive across the grass, but there is no other way."

"You are very kind," he declared. "I am in despair at my clumsiness."

I gave him my box of cigarettes. Lady Angela hesitated.

"I think," she said, "that I ought to stay with you, Prince, while Mr. Ducaine goes up for the cart."

"Indeed, Lady Angela, you are very kind," he answered, "but I could not permit it. I regret to say that I am in some pain, and I have a weakness for being alone when I suffer. If I desire anything Mr. Ducaine's servant will be at hand."

So we left him there. At any other time the prospect of that walk with Lady Angela would have filled me with joy. But from the first moment of leaving the cottage I was uneasy.

"What do you think of that man?" I asked her abruptly. "I mean personally?"

"I hate him," she answered, coolly. "He is one of those creatures whose eyes and mouth, and something underneath his most respectful words, seem always to suggest offensive things. I find it very hard indeed to be civil to him."

"Do you happen to know what Colonel Ray thinks of him?" I asked her.

"I have no special knowledge of Colonel Ray's likes or dislikes," she answered.

"Forgive me," I said. "I thought that you and he were very intimate and that you might know. I wonder whether he takes the Prince seriously."

"Colonel Ray is one of my best friends," she said, "but I am not in his confidence."

A slight reserve had crept into her tone. I stole a glance at her face; paler and more delicate than ever it seemed in the gathering darkness. Her lips were firmly set, but her eyes were kind. A sudden desire for her sympathy weakened me.

"Lady Angela," I said, "I must talk to some one. I do not know who is honest. You are the only person whom I dare speak to at all."

She looked round cautiously. We were out of the plantation now, in the open park, where eavesdropping was impossible.

"You have a difficult post, Mr. Ducaine," she said, "and you will remember——"

"Oh, I remember," I interrupted. "You warned me not to take it. But think in what a position I was. I had no career, I was penniless. How could I throw away such a chance?"

"Something has happened—this morning, has it not?" she asked.

I nodded.

"Yes."

She waited for me to go on. She was deeply interested. I could hear her breath coming fast, though we were walking at a snail's pace. I longed to confide in her absolutely, but I dared not.

"Do not ask me to tell you what it was," I said. "The knowledge would only perplex and be a burden to you. It is all the time like poison in my brain."

We were walking very close together. I felt her fingers suddenly upon my arm and her soft breath upon my cheek.

"But if you do not tell me everything—how can you expect my sympathy, perhaps my help?"

"I may not ask you for either," I answered sadly. "The knowledge of some things must remain between your father and myself."

"Between my father and yourself," she repeated.

I was silent, and then we both started apart. Behind us we could hear the sound of footsteps rapidly approaching, soft quick footsteps, muffled and almost noiseless upon the spongy turf. We stood still.

CHAPTER XIII.

A BRIBE.

I wheeled round and peered into the darkness. Lady Angela's fingers clutched my arm. I could feel that she was trembling violently. It was Grooton whose figure loomed up almost immediately before us—Grooton, bareheaded and breathless.

"What is it?" I exclaimed quickly.

"I think, sir, that you had better return," he panted.

He pointed over his shoulder towards the "Brand," and I understood. In a moment I was on my way thither, running as I had not done since my college days. I stumbled over antheaps, and more than once I set my foot in a rabbit hole, but somehow I kept my balance. As I neared the cottage I slackened my speed and proceeded more stealthily. I drew close to the window and peered in. Grooton had been right indeed to fetch me. The Prince was standing before my desk, with a bundle of papers in his hand. I threw open the door and entered the room. Swift though my movement had been, a second's difficulty with the catch had given the Prince his opportunity. He was back in his easy chair when I entered, reclining there with half-closed eyes. He looked up at me with well simulated surprise.

"You are soon back, Mr. Ducaine," he remarked calmly. "Did you forget something?"

"I forgot," I answered, struggling to recover my breath, "to lock up my desk."

"An admirable precaution," he admitted, watching as I gathered my papers together, "especially if one has valuables. It is an exposed spot this, and very lonely."

"I am curious," I said, leaning against the table and facing him, "I am curious to know which of my poor possessions can possibly be of interest or value to the Prince of Malora."

The calm hauteur of his answering stare was excellently done. I had a glimpse now of the aristocrat.

"You speak in enigmas, young man," he said. "Kindly be more explicit."

"My language can scarcely be more enigmatic than your actions," I answered. "I was fool enough to trust you and I left you here alone. But you were not unobserved, Prince. My servant, I am thankful to say, is faithful. It was he who summoned me back."

"Indeed!" he murmured.

"I might add," I continued, "that I took the liberty of looking in through the side window there before entering."

"If it amused you to do so, or to set your servant to spy upon me," he said, "I see no reason to object. But your meaning is still unexplained."

"The onus of explanation," I declared, "appears to me to rest with you, Prince. I offered the hospitality of my room, presumably to a gentleman not to a person who would seize that opportunity to examine my private papers."

"You speak with assurance, Mr. Ducaine."

"The assurance of knowledge," I answered. "I saw you at my desk from outside."

"You should consult an oculist," he declared. "I have not left this chair. My foot is still too painful."

"You lie well, Prince," I answered, "but not well enough."

He looked at me thoughtfully.

"I am endeavouring," he said, "to accommodate myself to the customs of this wonderful country of yours. In France one sends one's seconds. What do you do here to a man who calls you a liar?"

A Gorgeous Display of Imperial Wealth

The Resources of the Empire Will be Exhibited at the Coronation of King George V.

London, Oct. 22.—The great event of next year the Coronation of King George V.—will be celebrated by an exhibition which will show the dominion, power and resources of the British Empire.

From India will come marvellous artisans and world-famed wonder-workers, while exhaustive specimens of her extraordinary agricultural and mineral products will be housed in exact replicas of Indian palaces. Her priceless treasures will be, for the first time, adequately set forth, and visitors will be able to see how large a part India plays in the prosperity and greatness of the British Empire. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the Soudan, British Guiana, Jamaica, the Fiji Islands, and others, will tell the story of their origin and extraordinary development.

For the first time in the history of the British Empire there will be seen representatives of all the races and nationalities who owe allegiance to the King, and their special industries will be reproduced.

In addition to gold-miners, backwoodsmen, and other pioneers of the Empire there will be aborigines from Australia, Maoris from New Zealand, the red Indians from the Far West, the semi-civilized tribes from the Fiji Islands, colored people from the Matabele and Bechuanaland, Esquimaux from the frozen North, and Chinamen from the Malay Peninsula. The homes and habits of these people, interesting, striking and strange, with their work, will be shown.

The United Kingdom, too, will take its part. The wonderful resources and epoch-making industries of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales will all be in evidence. In some of the many palaces of the Imperial household there will be replicas of noble British mansions, while the grounds will contain representations of some of the beauty spots of the United Kingdom.

Seats for the great pageant are already being ordered, and, in the City of London, Coronation risks are already being insured against. The rate of insurance at present is from 8 to 10 per cent., but it is rapidly rising, and is expected to reach 15 to 20 per cent. before long.

The insurance is against financial loss which would ensue should the Coronation, from any cause, not take place next year. Protection can also be obtained against loss consequent upon an eleventh-hour postponement to a later date in the same year. The insurance particularly concerns, of course, those who erect stands or make contracts for decorations and illuminations, etc.

The present rates, it is interesting to know, are not so high as were those for King Edward. This is on account of King George's comparative youth.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT

The Duke of Connaught, with his wife and daughter, are on their way to South Africa. The Duke is here seen seated with the Duchess on his left, and his daughter, Patricia, on his right. The Duke's son, Prince Arthur of Connaught, is also shown in the picture.

PARISIANS WERE AMUSED

A Vacuum Cleaner Caused a Crowd to Collect—Looking for a Fire

Paris, Oct. 22.—To run to a fire seems to be inherent in the human race, and is as much in evidence in Paris as elsewhere. A day or two ago a large crowd gathered in one of the main streets and gazed expectantly and wonderingly at the upper floors, while people continued to run up from different directions. There was no evidence of firemen with their ladders and hose, but leading from an engine in a wagon at the edge of the sidewalk was a rubber hose which led into a window on the third floor. No smoke could be seen, which puzzled the crowd, although the hose and engine intimated that there were flames somewhere about the building.

The anxiety of the crowd was allayed, but its curiosity increased when it was discovered that the mysterious machine at the edge of the curb was only a vacuum cleaning apparatus in action. The wonder and delight of the Parisians at this labor-saving process of removing dirt was amusing to behold, for it is but recently that the conservative householders and landlords of Paris have taken up the new-fangled method.

AN ECCENTRIC CAREER

Death Comes to a Man Whose Life Was Blasted by a Love Affair

London, Oct. 22.—By the death, in Brigg Workhouse, of George Hobbs-white, at the age of 90, a remarkable career is ended. He was one of the best-known characters in North Lincolnshire, and was a native of Saxby All Saints, where he learnt the trade of a shoemaker, afterwards setting up in business there. More than 50 years ago he fell in love, but trouble came, and he parted from his sweetheart. This changed the whole course of the man's life. He gave up his business and led the life of a tramp and outcast. It is said that he was the heir to a comfortable fortune, but he could never be induced to claim it. Once he was almost induced to sign the necessary documents. It is supposed that for more than forty years he never slept in a bed. His resting place was in wagons, stackyards, under hedges, or in the open fields. He preferred rags and tatters to a life of comfort. Several times he was convicted for sleeping out, and having no visible means of subsistence. About four years ago he was induced to enter the workhouse, and he had remained there ever since as a "paying guest."

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its dependent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For a time the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has a "somewhat-to-do" feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a mere nostrum as a substitute for this well-known medicine of proved composition, and even though the urgent dealer may sincerely make a little larger profit, Nothing Else is Its Equal.

CONAN DOYLE, M.D.

The Creator of Sherlock Holmes Discourses on Doctors Ancient and Modern

London, Oct. 22.—Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's address at St. Mary's Hospital School was a mixture of grave and gay. The romance of the medical profession was his theme. Thirty years ago, when he was a regular practitioner, the profession was divided into two classes, those who were qualified and those who were not. Sir Arthur began practice among the unqualified. "I served in the legion of the lost. After that I worked in the slums of Sheffield and Birmingham. Next I was an unqualified surgeon for an Arctic whaler, later the qualified surgeon for a West African vessel."

As yet the speech had been accompanied only by laughter. When he told of the tremendous value of a medical training for all men amusement gave place to earnest attention. A medical training tinged the whole philosophy of a man's life. It imparted a healthy scepticism, a desire to grave from facts only. Further it taught every man to act promptly, and to keep his head in critical moments, to be kind and yet strong. Where else could be found so fine a training.

Such a training was not free of dangers, most of which could be obviated in the great post-graduate course called life. First, there was undue materialism. The tendency of the medical student was to talk of immutable laws, and to say that laws were final. It was the post-graduate course of life that brought the realization that there must be a law-maker behind every law.

"Another danger is that of intellectual priggishness. There is a type of young medical man who has all diseases and remedies tabulated and labelled. You produce the symptoms and he will produce the tabloid.

"Life might serve, too, to convert him into a more finished product. A strong and kindly personality is as valuable as actual knowledge. I do not advocate that trained urbanity known as the bedside manner, but rather a true geniality. Above all, no doctor has a right to be a pessimist. For all time we have known that the cheery man is the healing man."

The progress in the study of medicine during thirty years was best illustrated by a single story. "In the days of my studentship the medical practitioner resembled a blind man with a club, who swung it at random. Sometimes he hit the disease and sometimes the patient. It is not one quarter of a century since a physician, who acted on his discovery that he suffered all diabetes insipidus, said one day from his bed he would dispense drachms for the cure of severe diseases."

THE VASTNESS OF THE VINEYARD

GROWING Grapes for Gain in the Great Belt Along the Shore of Lake Erie

BY EDWARD HUNGERFORD

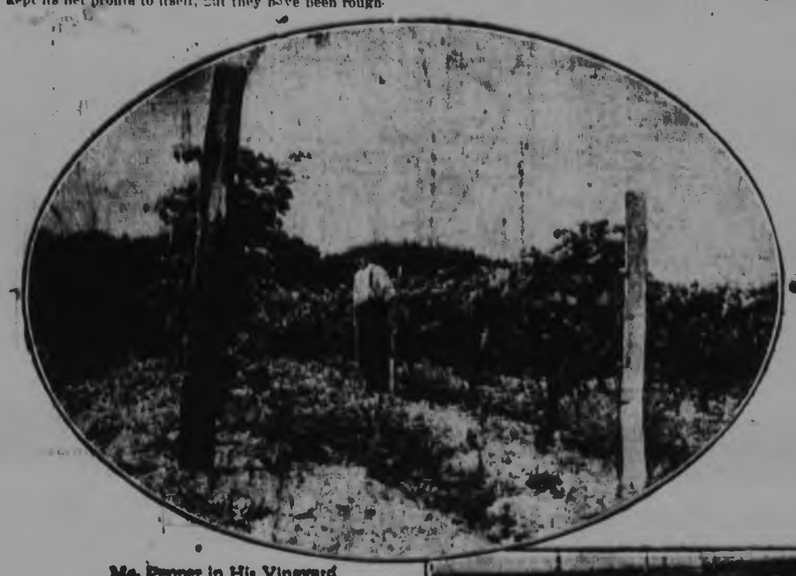
GOD gave the sunny southern shores of Lakes Erie and Ontario to be the proving ground of the grape. He made other great vineyards to blossom on the steep slopes of the well named finger lakes of Central New York. But the largest of the single vineyards—wherein the growers figure their product by the tons, in hundreds and in thousands—stretches along the south shore of Lake Erie from a point close to the city limits of Buffalo straight to the Pennsylvania line.

The greater portion of that abundant grape district lies in Chautauqua county, and Chautauqua county finds abundant pride in the fact that it is the only strictly agricultural district within the State of New York which has shown a distinct and continued population growth within the last few years.

From that Chautauqua grape belt—about fifty miles in length and never more than three or four miles in width—7,500 carloads of grapes were harvested last year. Those refrigerator cars formed into trains would make more than a hundred of the fast freights; put close together they would stretch from New York to Rhinecliff, a distance of some ninety miles.

A single concern at Fredonia with eight hundred acres sold its crop last year at a figure known to be close to $125,000. That concern, naturally enough, kept its net profits to itself, but they have been roughly estimated by growers and buyers at more than fifty per cent. That fifty per cent tells its own story—the story of the gain that grapes may spell for the thrifty husbandman. The profit is a sort of self-regulating thing at that. For when the crop is below the normal—as is decidedly the case this year—prices advance so that the husbandman's increased profit on his reduced production closely balances his lesser profits in the "bumper years."



Mr. Pepper in His Vineyard.

Take the case of Sherman Lowell, at Fredonia. Mr. Lowell is a native of Chautauqua county, a scientific husbandman in the bargain. The Lowell farm has been in the possession of the one family for ninety-eight years. For more than half that time it plugged along as an ordinarily successful general farming proposition. Half a century ago Lincoln Fay first showed the Chautauqua county growers how to grow grapes. When Mr. Sherman Lowell was twelve years old his father gave to him an acre of the farm to do with as he pleased. It was all his, that acre, and the boy set it out in grapes. Those sturdy vines still hug the trellises and bear bountifully. They repay in solid measure the loving care that a man has spent upon them throughout the entire span of his active years.

"Some of the grapes here, along our street," he adds in the quaint fashion of the farmers at the far west end of New York, "have been doing well for fifty years, and I have no reason to believe that vines with care and attention may not bear profitably for a full century. Care and attention are the requisite things. A man with twenty acres of grapes should find them bringing him in a profit of from $1,500 to $2,000 a year, a comfortable living from a property that is giving him his food and bed all the while."

Grape land, undeveloped, in Chautauqua county may be bought all the way from $40 to $80 an acre, depending largely upon its accessibility to large towns and railroad shipping facilities. The grapes come into their bearing in three years. A few clusters will be shown the second year and the heavy bearing should begin in the sixth year. A developed vineyard is worth all the way from $300 to $400 an acre.

The Protecting Lake.

"The lake is a great protection to us," Mr. Lowell will tell you. "We have never known it to go below zero here in the grape belt, while twenty miles to the south of here, on the shores of Chautauqua Lake, they think nothing of the mercury dropping to forty below zero in the intense cold of a normally hard winter. Because of this protection we are not often disturbed by frosts. Ours is a natural grape belt."

You put the Chautauqua grape belt behind you, with its pungent odors stealing through the open windows of the railroad cars and the boys coming through the trains in early autumn selling the little baskets of the fresh, luscious fruit, and turn east toward the steep hillsides of Keuka Lake. It is a day's ride, travelling much of the way by local trains and making many connections and changes of cars, but before dusk you will come either to Penn Yan or Hammondsport, the guarding towns at either end of the wonderful lake of the grapes. At either of those towns you are in the atmosphere of the vineyards—the talk you gather on the train or in the hotels is the gossip of crops and of markets—everything is in the vintage. For here at Keuka Lake, where the output in toto is less than that of the Chautauqua district, they make a high speciality of their wines. The cellars and the sub-cellars multiply upon those steep hillsides; the market for American champagnes is growing steadily year after year.

Grapes by the Ton

The champagne process is of itself worth detailed attention. The white or colorless grapes are gathered and grouped together—so many of this variety, so many of that. The blend changes from year to year—for the grapes are never exactly the same two years in succession. The blend is a matter of constant and careful tests—there must be so much sugar, so much acid, not too much of either—and the making of that blend is the great secret of the champagne business.

Once the blend is made the grapes are pressed in the great vats and the wine is drawn and bottled. The bottles are laid away with much care on racks and the long and tedious process of making that year's a successful vintage is well begun. The bottles are placed upon their sides—hundreds of thousands of them in the long racks—and every little while the workers in the cellars turn them with a quick, nervous, adept twist. As they twist the bottles they also raise them almost imperceptibly each time, but at the end of a twelvemonth each is standing straight upon its head.

Throughout those twelve months a slight sediment has been gathering in each bottle of the champagne. To rid the bottle of that sediment is the final great problem of the champagne making and the reason for the constant turning and changing of the bottle's position. When it finally stands upon its head the sediment rests against the cork. It is not a quarter of an inch thick, but still it must be removed. They have finally solved the problem of its removal after many years of experimentation.

The bottles are sunk neck deep into long troughs and their heads solidly frozen. The sediment becomes a mere frozen capsule of foreign matter. After that it is only dexterous work to uncork the bottle and remove that frozen capsule. The bottle is filled to the cork with champagne once again, a drop of two of brandy added, and then it goes for a long rest of four or five years in the cool, dark cellars below it is ready for the market and appears [illegible] are passing upon the quality of the vintage.

The Trolley Car Comes to Mr. Pepper's Farm—and Is His Servant

We have digressed, and here about us are the vineyards, rising terrace upon terrace upon the steep hillsides of the lake as we go slipping out along a shore road from Penn Yan. We go five or six miles through as delightful a stretch of rural country as one may find in Central New York, then the conductor jerks his bell cord sharply, the car stops abruptly and he comes forward and touches us upon the elbow.

"This is Pepper's," he says.

The Case of James Pepper.

We find ourselves standing in the middle of a stretch of country highway, its long vista arched as far as the eye may see with graceful maples. In front of us, at the first start of a mighty hillside and setting back in a shady lawn, stands a modern house. There is a young girl in smart attire lounging in a hammock under the trees, and on the porch, reading his daily paper, James Pepper.

"I always had a hankering to own this place," he tells you, "because some years ago I was a farm hand upon it."

That, then, is this man's life story. It is the story of a man who began with nothing save the competence of his own mind and hands and who had won something dangerously like success—his own free holding, a place of some distinction in the community, a home that any city man might be glad to own, position for his family, and forty acres of a single vineyard stretching from the back door of his house to the high crest of that mighty hill.

It is a mighty hill. You start from Mr. Pepper's house confidently to go to the back of his farm. Before you reach it you are gasping for breath—unless you are something of an athlete. You have hardly gone a quarter of a mile, but the smoke curling chimney tops of the husbandman's house are a good three hundred feet below you. Still, there is a reward for that stout tramp, and that reward is a rarely lovely view—a fertile valley in the foreground, then a little wooded ridge, and beyond it the narrow arm of the wonderfully blue Keuka. A white steamboat is making stately progress down that arm, and your eye quickly surveys its path until it is lost in the willows that grow at the entrance of Penn Yan inlet—you can see the church spires of that little village rising above the tree tops.

But you came here to see grapes, not the view, and Mr. Pepper is toying with the trellised vines.

"There is one thing that no grape grower can afford to forget, and that thing is the fact that these vines require constant attention. I have figured that I must make twenty-three visits to every vine during the course of a single season. In the springtime we begin by cutting out the underbrush and rank growths, and then everything must be put in thorough shape for the season's growing. The trellises are tightened and made fast to the solid tons of grapes that they must bear by fall and the vines made fast to them by ties. We tie them at the bottom with willow [illegible]

Then follows the pruning—a matter for care and judgment. Dead ends and even canes of more than a year's growth must be clipped and carried off.

"The more a grape grower gets into the business the more he thinks of the pruning. The old fashioned folks were more than half afraid to cut their vines; nowadays we realize that it is the very best thing we can do for them. We have got to keep a pretty even balance between the 'wood,' as we call the stalks, and the fruit. If we let a vine go all to fruit in one year it may bring some records that year, but it will be some summers after that before it is worth its salt. Such an abnormal yield saps its growth.

"On the other hand, the grower by neglecting the use of his pruning knife may grow a vine that runs its strength into wood rather than fruit. There is a balance, and a fairly delicate balance at that. That is where the business needs care and skill of a certain sort."

You interrupt Mr. Pepper and ask him about himself. He is level headed and reticent. He would far rather talk about the grapes, but finally he points down across the valley to a distant vineyard of some forty acres lying there in the snug embrace of a sluggish hill. His face lights up.

Frost and the Grapes.

"They say the hillsides are a better protection against frost," he tells you, "but last year those grapes down in my vineyard there stood a nip that caused a lot of havoc up here on the uplands."

You bring him back to the point of issue. That, then, is also his vineyard, and the story slowly unfolds. Mr. Pepper's father was an Englishman who came to this country about the time of the civil war. He wanted to make a living out of farming, and so he headed for Central New York, just then in its golden age of successful agriculture. But it was hard even in a land of milk and honey, of fat and prosperity, to get started without capital. He found it hard. But he stuck it out—manfully. He lived to see a fair measure of success for himself—to see his boy, Jim, striking out on a pretty broad path toward success.

James Pepper has already told you that he once worked in that hillside vineyard as a farmhand. Perhaps he then dreamed that some day those rich acres would all be his—farmhands do dream those very dreams sometimes. He must have laughed himself out of those dreams. Farmer P——, who owned that place, was hardly likely to let so fine a vineyard out of his hands.

But after a little success had begun to come to Mr. Pepper's hands and he was established with his brothers there in the bottom of the valley he heard great news about the vineyard on the hill. Farmer P—— had got religion, religion of the John Alexander Dowie sort. Farmer P—— had an invalid wife, ill and crippled with rheumatism, and the saintly John Alexander was promising her complete health. To that rainbow she appealed. Dowie beckoned them toward Chicago. So it was that Farmer P—— sold that glorious vineyard, the homestead of the generations before him, and put the money in Dowie's lace factories. He took his wife and started for Chicago. When the crash of Zion City came they were only two out of hundreds who said goodby to the rainbow—the skies grew suddenly black.

One man's loss, one man's folly, is sure to be another's gain, and in a twinkling Mr. Pepper found himself owner of the hillside that he had coveted. He built a modern house; he put money, labor, brains into his vines. He spread the trellises, the output of the place began to multiply and still he says that he has not yet done. He has gone down into the valley and built the vineyard there—his farm is a good, [illegible] upon the trellises—Delawares, Catawbas, Concords, Salems—these are the standard and popular varieties of the Keuka district. He stops suddenly and lifts a cluster to your glance.

The Great Niagara.

"The Niagaras," he says. "My, what a furor they made when first they came out. They were patented, just as a man will patent a harvester or a binder or a trolley car or any other sort of machinery. They would snatch off a man's head if they caught him trying to propagate the plants, and as a safeguard they made him send every one of the cuttings back to them. You see it was a hard thing to patent that grapevine, for it will grow like a willow from a cutting and the Niagara people had their own troubles. Nowadays it's as free as air and a mighty good grape to grow."

The busy season for these husbandmen at Keuka comes close to the first of October, when the grapes come into the fullness of their bearing. First frosts of winter are sure to come close to the twentieth of that autumn month, so that there is no time to be lost. The grapes are brought down in great shallow trays to the packing house at the foot of the hillside as fast as they can be cut from the trellises, and there other help, mostly women and young girls, fill the familiar little four pound wooden baskets that you see at your corner grocer's.

You stand at the door of Mr. Pepper's packing house and listen idly to the rumble of the trolley car as it goes humming down toward Penn Yan. The husbandman tells you that right there is a trolley road that is worth the interest on its securities.

"It struck its rails right out into a territory that was remote from steam railroad facilities," he explains, "and it has been broad gauge enough to realize that what we farmers needed was for it to be a freight as well as passenger feeder to the steam cars."

Then he explained in detail. It was a pretty thin territory for a trolley line to make a living by passenger trade alone. But a trolley which could save a farmer a long freight haul with his team, particularly over the rough winter roads of that hilly country, did fair to become a winning proposition. So that little ten mile feeder was built strong enough, and with easy enough grades, for handling freight cars from the steam railroads. Track connections were made with the through steam railroad routes at Penn Yan, electric freight locomotives purchased and sidings placed at every crossroads along the route.

The result is that to-day the husbandmen of Yates county no longer have the long, hard haul into Penn Yan. Refrigerator cars, iced and ready for packing, are slipped into those crossroads sidings and the farmers hardly have to haul their product beyond the limits of their own estates. There is the economic possibility of the rural trolley line that has been all too little realized—an infinite possibility to go hand in hand with the agricultural renaissance of the State of New York.

"When my crop is ready," Mr. Pepper told us, "the trolley people stand a car right here at my barn door. Their headway is flexible enough so that they can give me the car for a full half hour, without disturbing their passenger schedules, and if our farm crew couldn't load a box car in thirty minutes I wouldn't feel that they were entitled to any medals at all."

When we slipped out of Hammondsport, at the far end of the lake, that night, a man on the dinky train added to our information on grapes.

"They are going over on the hillsides about Dundee, all through Steuben county," he explained, "and buying land at $40 to plant to grapes. Don't let them tell you that Louisiana is far from the beaten[illegible]

TO BE RAT PROOF

San Francisco Protecting Itself From Future Danger

San Francisco is being "rat-proofed." The word has become part of the San Bengalese of the better class who were proofing," and refers to a style of brick and concrete architecture that is enforced by condemnation proceedings in portions of the city until now the centres of rat population. Eighteen months have passed since the last capture of a rat afflicted with the bubonic plague—the 'black death' of history, which fleas borne by the rats spread to human hosts. But the fight to exterminate the rodents goes on. According to the report of Dr. G. M. Converse, of the United States public health and marine hospital service, the sewers are being poisoned and the rats arebeing caught in cages and snap traps at the rate of 8,600 monthly. In "Butchertown," in the congested Japanese quarters, and in the wholesale fruit and produce quarters of the town, the ramshackle buildings are being rat-proofed in their basements or entirely replaced with solid structures. By and by every city on the continent may be rat-proofed, fly-proofed, tick-proofed, and mosquito-proofed, until thes death-dealing vermin are utterly destroyed.

Jury Disagreed.

Valleyfield, Que., Oct. 28.—After being out all night, the jury hearing the trial of the Houle brothers, accused of the murder of D. Pelletier, came into court yesterday morning and announced that they had failed to agree. This is the second trail. The jury was discharged at 12.30. The prisoners will not be admitted to bail, but will be sent up for a third trial.

Judge Mercier, who on Wednesday afternoon, charged strongly against the two brothers, censured the jury very strongly.

"The day that Parliament abolishes the death penalty for murder will be a regrettable day. There will be open license for murder and pillage of the worst kind," he declared.

Easy Enough.

Parents as well as teachers have sometimes to run the gauntlet of awkward questions.

"Father," said little Tommy one day, "what is an equinox?"

Father—Why—er—it is—ahem! For goodness' sake, Tommy, don't you know anything about mythology at all? An equinox was a fabled animal—half horse, half cow. Its name was derived from the words "equine" and "ox." It does seem as if these public schools don't teach children anything nowadays.—Strand Magazine.

The Swish of the Rod.

A college president in an address on pedagogy said:

"And one of the most remarkable changes in the last thirty years of teaching is the abolition of corporal punishment. A boy of this generation is never whipped. But boys of the last generation must have believed that their instructors all had for motto:

"'The swish is father to the taught.'"

The Unicorn.

Chinese annals of great antiquity contain numerous detailed accounts of the supposedly fabulous unicorn, in which the descriptions are identical with those handed down from the earliest times in the mythology or occidental countries. From this it is inferred that at some time in the remote past there actually did exist a single horned equine or cervine animal of some sort.

THE SUICIDE QUESTION.

Rate Shows Increase In All Countries Except Norway.

Although in many cases suicides leaves notes in which they very earnestly and conveniently protest their sanity, present day coroners' juries are apt to remain true to the time-honored formula, "Suicide during temporary insanity." That view is vindicated by the Munich alienist, Prof. Gaupp, who has completed from official statistics a work on suicide and its causes.

The writer holds that by far the majority of cases are due either to pronounced insanity or to psychopathic degeneracy, all other causes being relatively insignificant. The suicide rate shows a continued increase in all civilized countries with the exception of Norway, where the legal suppression of the drink traffic is mainly responsible for the decrease. In Germany the northern provinces and Saxony have the highest rates; Posen the lowest.

Economic crises, business failure, higher cost of living and religious mania all tend to send the suicide rate up, while revolutions and wars have the contrary effect. The Germanic races produce more suicides or attempts at self-destruction than the Latin, Slav and Celtic races. Protestant countries have a higher rate than Roman Catholic countries, and among the Jews suicide is rare.

Men commit suicide oftener than women; single persons oftener than married persons. The rate increases with advancing age; only between 70 and 80 it is lower than in the previous 10 years. May and June are the months during which the impulse to suicide is strongest.

In Europe between 60,000 and 70,000 persons end their lives voluntarily every year, according to official returns, but this figure Prof. Gaupp considers far below the actual number of suicides.

Letting His Light Shine.

If anybody wanted to see something curious just come with him, the marble cutter said. Somebody did. So he led the way to a monument that had inscriptions engraved in three languages — English, German and Hebrew.

"Same thing in each one," he said. "You can see for yourself what it says in English—a good citizen, a good father, a good husband, and peace to his soul. The relatives had that eulogy printed in all three languages because their friends are kind of mixed on tongues. Some can read one thing and some another, and he was too good a man for anybody to pass by unaware of his virtues simply because they couldn't read the language on the tombstone."

Reception to Rainbow.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—Hon. Wm. Templeman stated last night that he would be at Victoria on Nov. 7 to formally receive, on behalf of the Canadian Government, the Canadian cruiser Rainbow.

G. J. Desbarats, Deputy Minister of the naval service, Admiral Kingsmill and Commander Roper will also be present, representing the department. It has been expected that Hon. L. P. Brodeur, the political head of the Department would go to Victoria, but his services are much in demand in Drummond-Arthabaska.

Want to Marry Miss Leneve.

London, Oct. 28.—Since her acquittal on the charge of being an accessory after the fact to the murder of Mrs Crippen, Ethel Leneve has been in the country under the protection of Arthur Nelson, Dr. Crippen's counsel. Newton has been swamped with offers for Miss Leneve's services from music halls, beauty doctors and others. He has received for her sixteen offers of marriage.

FORD--The Quality Car

Built Stronger To Last Longer

MANY a dollar has been saved in a repair operation by the owner of a Ford car. Why? Because the Ford Model T is built right; it is built of material that lasts longer and gives better service to its owner. Henry Ford, the manufacturer of this car, has spent millions of dollars in perfecting a car that would be of little expense or trouble to the owner. Vanadium steel is used in all working parts where wear is occasioned, for vanadium is the strongest steel obtainable and strength is what you get when you purchase a Ford. "Every part built for Strength and Service," is the common phrase at the Ford Factory. Mail us a card and we will call for you in this car of service. A ride in the Model T will convince you of the value in a Ford car.

One leg was cut off just below the thigh. Deceased was forty-three years of age, and leaves a wife and two children. His wife is a daughter of Thos. Elliott, of Norwood. William H. and Hugh Cuthbertson, and Mr. Isaac Potter of this place are brother and sisters of deceased.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

$50,000 FIRE AT MONTREAL

Special Wire to the Examiner.

THE FIRST SNOW OF 1910 REPEATS RECORD OF 1909

The first harbinger of winter, the first snowfall, came last year on October 28th as it comes this year on the same date, but nominally the first snow will come this year on Sunday, Oct. 23rd, at 4.15 p.m. At that hour and on that day, while the sun was shining in the west, a fugitive cloud in the zenith sifted down a slight but visible spray of snow for about ten seconds. To-day's snow, however, was not much more positive—it was a clumsy compromise between snow and rain, which before ten o'clock, marked it failure to "make good" by bursting into rainy tears. We have "Indian summer" or "St. Martin's summer" yet to come, before winter gets a full nelson on us that the weather man can't break.

THE GRAND JURY'S REPORT TO CHANCELLER BOYD

Presentment Tells of Their Visit to The Different Charitable Institutions---Everything Found in Satisfactory Condition---His Lordship's Comments.

The Grand Jury made its usual presentment to His Lordship Chancellor Sir John Boyd at the Fall Assizes yesterday. The report was as follows:

To His Lordship Chancellor Sir John Boyd:

May it please your Lordship, the Grand Jury for the County of Peterborough, at the sittings of the High Court, beg to present as follows:

We are pleased to join with you in congratulating the Dominion of Canada on the material prosperity it now enjoys. We also beg to express our appreciation of the fair and impartial manner in which you, with the other Judges of our fair Province, conduct the Courts, thereby maintaining the integrity of the same, and may you long occupy the exalted position among your colleagues and the people of this Province.

We deplore the fact that our duties necessitated our having to deal with a charge of murder, but like other places, we are sometimes fortunate, and sometimes unfortunate. As directed by you we visited the gaol, and found nine prisoners and five vagrants. The gaol is well conducted as far as we were able to see, everything appearing clean and satisfactory, and consistent with the Acts regulating such institutions. We would urge upon the city the advisability of providing some proper place for the old poor, other than a place of correction.

We are pleased to note that the County Council have abolished the old stove system of heating, and installed a steam system, that no doubt will give satisfaction. Other improvements are under way in and around the court buildings, which will add materially to the requirements and appearance, when completed. The offices of the officials of administration of justice and registrar, have All been recently attended to in a manner that brings credit to the County, excepting the Sheriff's Office and no doubt, in the near future, the requirements and appearance of that office will be attended to.

We also visited St. Joseph's Hospital and found thirty-five patients, all comfortable and skilfully and carefully looked after. The same may be said of Nicholls' Hospital, which has, at present, thirty-eight patients.

In driving to the House of Refuge we were deheited to notice that the city has almost finished an Isolation Hospital, which, when in operation, will do away with considerable domestic hardship that now exists, or at least when infectious diseases visit the homes of the ratepayers.

We also visited the County House of Refuge and found thirty-two patients, all happy and well looked after, in a manner very creditable to the County Council and staff. The old cesspool is now abandoned and an up-to-date septic tank is about completed, giving evidence that the authorities intend that institution to be among the best in the Province.

We also visited the Children's Shelter, St. Peter's Orphanage, House of Providence, and Protestant Home, and found everything in good condition. Sanitary arrangements were well looked after.

Trusting that the same favourable condition of affairs in general will continue.

Respectfully submitted,
John Comstock, Foreman.
Peterborough, Oct. 27th, 1910.

Chancellor Boyd, after congratulating the Jury upon its comprehensive report, expressed surprise that Peterborough was favoured with so many institutions of benefaction. They reflected a good deal of credit upon the community.

REPRESENTATIVE CITIZENS PAID LAST RESPECTS

The funeral of the late James Stevenson was held yesterday afternoon from his residence, Water street to Little Lake cemetery and a representative concourse of citizens followed the remains to their last resting place as a mark of esteem to one who had been such a faithful servant of the public. All the civic bodies, the City Council ,the City Trust Commission, the Board of Education, the Nicholls Hospital Board, with which the deceased had been connected, were represented, while there was a large turn-out of Oddfellows, of which he was a member. The pallbearers were Messrs. T. E. Bradburn, R. A. Morrow, Robt. Innis, H. Waddell, Rich. Hall and E. A. Peck.

The services at the house were impressive. Rev. Geo. W. Henderson of the Charlotte street Methodist church, read a portion of scripture, and Rev. Canon Davidson of St. John's, said the prayer. Rev. Mr. Shorey, of Picton, delivered the address. The services at the grave were conducted by the same clergymen.

"The White Squaw" One Of Best Dramas Of The Season

The romantic American drama, "The White Squaw" by Delia Clarke, will be the attraction at "The Grand" on Wednesday next, Nov. 2nd, for an engagement of one night only.

This play is said to have valid claim upon the admiration and patronage of veterans of the stage in this country, because it is a purely American play for Americans. It is a play built upon romance, laughter and heart interest.

The author, Miss Clarke, is well known from her former stage work under Augustine Daly, and Charles Frohman. Miss Clarke assumes the principal role in "The White Squaw," and with her here will be seen an excellent cast.

The scenes are laid in the wilderness of Michigan about 100 years ago. Antoine Campeau of Montreal, his wife and their two little daughters, Leah and Octavia, were among the earlier settlers who blazed their way through the forests that are now Detroit and its flourishing adjacent territory. Leah is dark, indicating her French ancestry on the father's side, while Octavia has the golden hair and blue eyes of her English mother. Campeau goes on a hunt one day allowing Leah to accompany him. He is slain by a wild beast, and the child is rescued by an Indian Michabo, who with his wife Ampata, rears the child to believe she is a redskin and their own.

It is when Leah, now known as Neamata, has grown to womanhood that the play opens. Octavia has also arrived at woman's estate and each is unaware of the other's existence. Through the workings of fate, the fair-haired sister has become the promised wife of a fur trader, Bruce Marshall, whose duties lead him to the section where Neamata's tepee stands. He meets Neamata, takes a kindly interest in her and teaches her to speak English. In return Neamata falls in love with him. Prior to this Neamata has been taught the French language by Jacques Cartier, a French Canadian trapper, and he has fallen in love with the girl he supposes to be an Indian. Octavia and her chaperone visit the locality, and the two sisters, unknown to each other, are brought face to face. It is from this maize of conditions that a dramatic chain is woven without a link missing to mar its completeness, beauty and interest.

LONG DRAWN OUT CASE OF FOLEY VS. WEST IS FINALLY DISPOSED OF

Verdict Returned by Jury Was in Favour of the Defendants ---Jury Was Out For Some Time---Many Witnesses Were Called---Plaintiff Must Pay All Costs.

After being out for some time, the jury hearing the case of Edward Foley versus Wm. West, Sr., and Wm West, Jr., portable saw-mill owners of Havelock, returned a verdict in favour of the defendants and the judgment of the court was accordingly, the action being dismissed. This case was the first to be heard after the opening of the Assizes, but was allowed to stand while the Gorham trial was proceeded with. It was concluded this morning. The plaintiff has to pay the entire costs of both parties in the action. The plaintiff was suing for $3,000 damages for permanent injuries he claimed he received while working for the defendants in their mill. Hall, Medd and Davidson appeared for the plaintiff, and O'Connell and Gordon for the defendants.

ANOTHER ARREST IN THE MONTREAL MURDER CASE

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, OCT. 28. Joseph Gaiudent, a waiter in the hotel in which Cecila Micheaud was taken the night of her disappearance, has been arrested as a material witness and it is thought that his statements will clear Chevrier and Derrault of murder charges. A street car conductor has turned up, who saw the girl whom he thought drunk, on the sidewalk near the park that night. He was called as a witness when the inquest continued this afternoon. More arrest sare expected.

MAY BE A REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA NOW

Special to the Examiner.

ST. PETERSBURG, OCT. 28.—That the fourth session of a third Duma which opened today will result in further disruption throughout Russia, with possible bloody revolution and turning to republicanism, was suggested as more than a possibility by the compositions proceedings. President Guchkoff has resigned and Duma without a head but with many factions, is like a great reptile with many legs. The session broke up in disorder this afternoon and the troops around the Czars palace and the government office are doubled.

Mr. Sam Baker Has Handsome New Barber Shop at Munro House

One of the handsomest tonsorial shops in the city is the one recently moved into by Mr. Sam. Baker. This up-to-date and fully equipped new shop is situated in the Munro House, and it will be known as the Munro house barber shop. There is an entrance off Water street, but a short distance above Mr. Baker's old stand, and also one off the rotunda of the hotel, making it most convenient for the guests of this popular hostelry to secure a shave or hair cut before going out to their respective businesses. The room is a large and spacious one, and furnished with all the latest improvements of the trade. There are three chairs, manned with three experienced barbers and the very best service is assured. Old and new patrons of Mr. Baker will find him well established in his new quarters.

DR. MARSH HAS CLEVER INVENTION

Has Produced a Portable Sidereal Timepiece Which is Being Manufactured By Well Known Toronto Company

REMARKABLE QUALITIES

Astronomers throughout Canada are rejoicing at present in the fact that a Canadian has produced a portable sidereal timepiece in the form of a watch of remarkable qualities.

For years the need has been felt and often expressed for a sidereal watch combining certain features. Dr. Marsh, of Springville with his experience at the watchmaker's bench and his thorough knowledge of Astronomy, proved the right man for the undertaking. After several years of careful work success crowned his efforts.

Even after the completion of the model watch difficulty was experienced in securing a manufacturer who would undertake the outlay necessary to produce the quantity required at a nominal figure. The various prominent U. S. manufacturers proved unequal to the task. Finally the matter was placed in the hands of the T. Eaton Company. They, with the aid of their Swiss factory, soon attained perfect success.

While the timepiece is wholly the invention of Dr. Marsh, he modestly ascribes the success of the undertaking to the enterprise of the great Eaton organization.

The watch is full jewelled with 21 ruby jewels. It is adjusted to five positions, compensated for temperature, and owing to the peculiar construction of the face-gear there is no lost motion in the hands. These, with the other desirable features, stamp the watch as high grade.

Already several of the chief observatories of Canada including Ottawa and Toronto, have secured these watches and inquiries from foreign lands are being received. Some very flattering testimonials received indicate that the time-piece fulfills its mission.

This contribution to the science of astronomy affords us the opportunity of congratulating Dr. Marsh and the Royal Astronomical Society of Peterborough.

THE AUTUMN ASSIZES.

The autumn assizes for Peterborough, now drawing to a close, were marked by several unusual features. It is to be noted that the criminal side was composed of two charges, the gravest known to the law—murder. The civil side consisted of four cases, every one of which involved considerations of death or serious injury to person or property—they were all actions to recover damages in respect of loss alleged to be sustained, by the fault of persons or corporations. Having regard to the prominent manner in which actual death involving besides death in prospect; and death by accident involved in the civil suits, were essential features, the autumn assizes for 1910, might well pass into local history as the "black assize." There were other peculiarities in procedure that establish precedents. For the first time, so far as known, in the history of Canadian courts, the counsel for the Crown and the defence in a murder charge—the Gorham case—voluntarily and by mutual consent, surrendered the right to address the jury at the close of the evidence, and left to the judge the work of summing up the evidence and instructing the jury, a rather striking evidence of confidence, founded upon knowledge, in the uprightness and high character of the Canadian judiciary. Another unusual, if not unprecedented feature was the fact of the presiding judge, Chancellor Boyd, declining to pass formal sentence in the case of a verdict of guilty of murder, and instead stating that he would forward the verdict and its rider—the strong recommendation to mercy—to the Executive. Thus we have befalling in our sight two or three incidents in the process of evolution, by precedent of the great system of British jurisprudence.

SURFACE TREATMENT.

A despatch informs us that in Regina a new departure is to be made in the interests of a moral movement. The travelling secretary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union suggests, with a view of furthering the interests of the local option campaign in that city in December, that on election day, a free lunch counter be set up, and tea, coffee and soft drinks served and the church bells rung. This proposal suggests a good deal of ambition and enterprise in a certain direction, but it is doubtful whether it will have much immediate moral or material (ballot-influencing) effect. Certainly it can have no permanent moral effect. It cannot be too often repeated that any moral reform that does not proceed from principle and subjective conviction is hardly worth while; it has no basis of permanency, and stands to fall when the, too often, frail and temporary scaffolding that supports it falls or is withdrawn. The people that will be influenced by the coffee and cake feature of the local option campaign in Regina differ in no way, in principle and motive, from the multitude that followed our blessed Lord for the sake of the loaves and fishes. It was not they, but the apostles that ranked themselves on the Master's side—on principle and conviction, not for reward—that carried the fiery cross of the Gospel into the dark places of the earth and kindled the flame that has glowed and grown and spread for two thousand years. Moral propagandism of the loaves and fishes variety, is of none effect, as an enduring element, whether it takes the form of bread and butter appeal to human animalism, or whether, in the form of sensational sermons, it assumes the shape of intellectual titillation, or whether it takes the form of restraint, instead of reforming the nature of the man. In view of permanent results, there is an immense amount of well intentioned energy wasted in moral enterprises that do not strike at the root of evil; that follow the principle of medical treatment of symptoms, instead of the disease itself—scotching the snake instead of killing it.

MARRIAGE MADE EASY.

Our good sister province, Quebec, has shown of late and is showing now, a great deal of enterprise, but all, as referred to here, unfortunately, of a sinister portent. It has evolved a combination of political element, that repeats, or, rather, realizes the miracle of the blending of grease and water—Conservatives, and Castors, Ultramontanes and Bleus rabid and unreasoning "Imperialists" and rabid and unreasoning radicals, with all their theoretically contradictory tenets or vagaries, are, in practice, working hand and glove with one common object—to "down Laurier." Montreal has compiled a fairly formidable record of civic putridity. Montreal has helped develop a Sheldon, and the conditions that Sheldonism stands for, and now we have Montreal producing a journal devoted of matrimonial exploitation, that cannot produce any less sinister results, any more dismal and deplorable failure, no matter what temporary success may attend them, than any of the other enterprises referred to. This matrimonial journal is a new development of bi-lingualism. It is printed, column for column, in English and French. The net is spread for both kinds of flies. This paper, of which "Number one, vol. I. 5 cents the number the numero" is before us, is devoted to advertisements of seekers of matrimonial mates of both sexes. With the characteristic gallantry of its Gallic side, "place aux dames" is its motto. Its rates of advertising are, for gentlemen) "one cent a word for each insertion and two cents for three"; the ladies, presumably because, naturally, they are less anxious for marriage, are encouraged in this wise: "All serious ladies will have the favour to advertise free, in one's turn until new order." With delicate deference to the convenience of patrons it is announced that Canadian stamps will be accepted. The first number contains sixteen columns of matrimonial "want ads". Of these ten are those of ladies. These are divided into two classes—"Ladies with means—ayant la fortune," and ladies without means—sans fortune." In respect of the former the announcement is made that "the full name and address of any lady advertisers under this head will be sent a receipt of price—one for 25c, five for 50c, and 12 for $1.00." With admirable solicitude, the "Correspondent"—for such is the name of this journalistic buckling medium, says: "Advertisers, who find their 'ideal' through this journal are urged to make full investigation before making a decision." This is advice which might well be followed in courtship conducted with less conspicuosity than through newspaper advertisements. The publishers of the "Correspondent" evidently trust in the gullibility of human nature, and the fact that wives and husbands are often chosen in ordinary every day life, with as little sense of responsibility as would be shown by being married by mail, and with no less disastrous results.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A Toronto paper announced, anent the Crippen case, that the "penalty for capital crime is death" This remarks the London Advertiser, with sad weariness, would correct any impression among its readers that the penalty was two dollars or ten days.

The Toronto Star is doing dominie duty by telling the public how to pronounce the name of Canada's new cruiser the Niobe, to wit, Ny-o-be. The Mail and Empire says this is wrong; the proper pronunciation being "tin-pot"—an orthoepy with a wealth of hidden wisdom, as one would say, the "tin" of the nation going to "pot."

Importance Of The Drummond And Arthabaska Bye-Election

(The Globe)

Let there be no mistake as to the issue in the Drummond-Arthabasca election. The contest is being waged against Liberalism and the spirit of Canadian nationality by three groups of opponents who would find it utterly impossible to unite on any constructive programme were they by any chance to win the seat. There are the Nationalists who seek to undo the work of conciliation in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier has spent the best years of his life and who regard the tie that binds Canada to Britain with suspicion. To them the most elementary steps in the direction of the defence of Canada are the inspiration of Downing street and the first fruit of Imperialism and militarism. They denounce Sir Wilfrid Laurier daily as a traitor to his race and to the principles of Canadian autonomy. There are the Ultramontanes, who have never forgiven the Liberal party for the successful fight it waged against the domination of the Church in secular affairs. More Catholic than the Pope, they see in the Bourassa movement an opportunity to recover some of their lost power, and the Ultramontane Press of Quebec is doing yeoman service for the Nationalists. The third party to this strange alliance is the Conservative organization of Quebec, representing the old Bleus who followed Macdonald and Cartier. They swallowed all their principles, turned their back on Borden's policy and have gone in with a rush behind Messrs. Monk and Bourassa. The Conservative party in Quebec has really ceased to exist. A few of the old Bleus wanted to put a straight party candidate into the field on the ground that they could not honestly support the attempt of Bourassa to split Canada up into racial and religious factions. They were overruled, and daily L'Evenement, the official Conservative organ of Quebec, makes frantic appeals to the Conservative electors to vote against Imperialism. On Monday it told its readers that 'the English Admiralty engages us in the construction of warships to bring us up little by little to the point of contributing to maintain the Imperial fleet. The speeches of Mr. Bourassa throw a new light on the methods of the Imperialists. Slowly, as Mr. Chamberlain said, we have been brought to the point—thanks to the feebleness and duplicity of Laurier—of spending fifteen millions. In two years they will be asking us for twenty millions. Once we are on the train they will make us pay well. We will be in the 'crime' up to the neck."

This is not a whit different from Bourassa's point of view. In appropriating a moderate sum for the laying down of ships to defend our coasts and protect our commerce the Liberal party, according to this French-Canadian Conservative organ is pandering to Imperialism. In Toronto, London, and elsewhere in Ontario the Conservative papers say the Liberal party's action is an insidious attempt to impair the Imperial tie. How can a party be seriously regarded that is so hopelessly at sea on such a fundamental question? In the Drummond-Arthabaska election we see the end of Conservatism as a political force in Quebec. Mr. Borden, by failure to put a candidate in the field, has written finis across his own political career. A Conservative party composed of tariff reformers from the West, protectionists and Imperial Federationists in Ontario, and anti-Imperialists in Quebec is nothing but a gigantic sham. Canadians of the rising generation who believe in Canada as a nation within the Empire will never entrust the reins of power to a combination of opposing factions. It would be merely another "nest of traitors," with Borden in Sir Mackenzie Bowell's former role.

Peterborough Will Have Trolley Line To Toronto By Way Of Port Hope

(Bowmanville Statesman)

Bowmanville will soon enjoy a trolley line to Toronto and intermediate points; also to Cobourg and intermediate points. Press despatches say that the route map of the Toronto and Eastern Radial Railway has been approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals at Ottawa, following its adoption by the Dominion Railway Commission. This means that the promoters of the new road—presumably the Canadian Northern Railway Company—are now at liberty to go ahead and buy or expropriate the right of way for the line which will run from Toronto via Whitby, Oshawa, Bowmanville, Newcastle and Port Hope to Cobourg, which is the terminus as it present planned. A branch line will be run from Oshawa to Lindsay along the eastern side of Scugog Lake, and another branch will go from Port Hope to Peterborough.

The section from Newcastle to Toronto will be the first to be built, and the work of grading and laying the road-bed will probably be begun at once and completed by Spring. This part of the route will closely follow the Kingston-road from Newcastle to the village of Cherrywood where it is believed that a junction will be made with the Canadian Northern Toronto-Ottawa line, thus securing an entrance, right into the city over the C.N.R. tracks which will make it a popular line of travel.

Bowmanville rejoices at the coming of this electric line as it will no doubt mean connection with the C.N.R., G.T.R. and we hope Port Bowmanville, which will make a capital coaling port for the Canadian Northern.

COUNTY ROAD SYSTEMS

From Farm and Dairy.

Seventeen counties in Ontario have established county road systems under the Highway Improvement Act. These are: Carleton, Frontenac, Halton, Hastings, Lanark, Leeds and Grenville, Lennox and Addington, Lincoln, Middlesex, Oxford, Peel, Perth, Prince Edward, Simcoe, Waterloo, Wellington, and Wentworth. The Act is applicable to 31 counties, so that nearly one-half of the Province is working under the Act. The Act was passed in 1901, and in the next year the County of Wentworth created their present county road system; this being followed in 1903 by the Counties of Simcoe, Wellington, and Lanark. With this nucleus, the number of county systems has steadily grown. In 1909, the last two counties, Leeds and Grenville, and Carleton, passed the necessary by-laws. To the end of 1909, the average has been equal to 15 counties, each operating for four years, in which period 1,125 miles of stone, or good gravel roads, have been built. This neglects a large amount of minor, incomplete and scattered improvements which will eventually be a part of the permanent work.

Expenditure under the Act since 1902 has been as follows:

Tell roads purchased	$153,897.98
Sundry grants to townships, villages and towns	89,957.02
Permanent bridge construction	366,225.21
Machinery, plant, etc.	113,544.84
Road construction and supervision	1,404,497.88
Total	$2,128,122.93

Of this amount the counties have spent $1,418,748.63. The Provincial expenditure, extending over eight years, has been $709,374.30, the Province contributing one-third of the total, or one dollar to each two dollars raised by the counties.

ACQUIRING LAND

From Farm and Dairy.

It is reported that about 10,000 acres of waste sand land in Simcoe Co., Ont., has been acquired by a New York millionaire at a price ranging from $1.50 to $6.00 an acre. Agents have been quietly purchasing the land for several weeks and it is alleged that they have their plans made for reforesting the land next summer.

According to information gained by the Alliston Herald, it is anticipated that within 10 years, walnut trees planted on these waste areas will yield at least $1.50 each in nuts per year and that the revenue from these will increase to $6.00 a tree as the trees mature. At the end of 25 years, it is estimated that the trees will measure 700 to 1,000 feet of lumber each.

Farm and Dairy is not inclined to give too much credence to the scheme since it is well known that walnuts of the common black variety are found naturally on soils varying from a loam to a heavy clay nature. The native white pine would be a much more certain proposition on these waste sand areas.

EXCITING RUNAWAY

An exciting runaway occurred last evening between five and six o'clock. A carter's horse and waggon were standing in front of Higgins' hardware store, when the horse took fright at an automobile and started on a dead tear towards East City. On the cart were a number of iron poles, and as they fell from the waggon the noise added to the fright of the animal and it ran harder. A young man crossing the Otonabee bridge, seeing the runaway coming, ran out and was successful in stopping the horse, and, at the same time, gathering up considerable mud, which took up the rest of the evening in an endeavour to get it off his clothes.

FAIRS SUCCESSFUL

From Farm and Dairy.

(Farm and Ranch Review):

The exhibition season for the summer months in Western Canada is over, and as a general thing the fairs have been quite successful, judged by the number of exhibits of agricultural products and the attendance. There is, however, good ground for regret that the fakir element has been so prominent. At some fairs the flim-flam artist and debasing show have been more noticeable than at others, and as a rule the fewer real good exhibits there have been the more brazen they been the riff-raff element. People have demanded the total prohibition of side shows at agricultural fairs, others have insisted upon a certain standard, but exhibition boards which look to the revenue have been generally partial to the "attractions."

The case for the disgraceful side-show is in keeping away from the side shows. These places operate only because they are patronized and what is more uncomplimentary to the country people, the side-shows claim that farmers are their best patrons.

At best the side-show is an expensive entertainment; and as for the flim-flammers who profess to give knick-knacks away for a dollar or less, no words are strong enough to condemn them as Limitless propositions. We have seen farmers part with a dollar for a whetstone that could be bought in the highest priced retail store for 10 cents and others paying a dollar for two bits of glass which had no intrinsic value whatever. When people go to fairs feeling superior to the side-shows and too busy to listen to the barker or the flim-flammer, then these parasites will disappear.

Life Saving on Conditions.

A treatise on "how to be kind, but cautious," might be written by a woman who played the part of good Samaritan in the One Hundred and Third street subway station. Another woman had fainted. What she needed to bring her to in a hurry was smelling salts, but nobody had smelling salts.

"I think she has a vinaigrette of her own in that bag," said the Samaritan, "but in the absence of a policeman I am afraid to open it to find out."

Something that looked like a small bottle could be discerned through the meshes of the chain bag, and the crowd, valiantly shifting responsibility, said, "Go ahead and open it."

"On one condition I will," said the Samaritan. "I want three bystanders to watch me and sign a written statement that I have taken nothing from the bag but the vinaigrette. I know this town too well to take any chances on being accused of theft."

The oath was drawn up in a jiffy, three signatures were appended, the Samaritan opened the bag, found the vinaigrette and proceeded with restorative measures.—New York Times.

The Real "Sherlock Holmes."

It was a well known Edinburgh professor of medicine who, all unconsciously, gave Sir Arthur Conan Doyle the idea of "Sherlock Holmes," the most famous detective known in fiction. Sir Arthur studied under him as a medical student.

"Gentlemen," this professor would say to the students, "I am not quite sure whether this man is a cork cutter or a slater. I observe a slight hardening on one side of his forefinger and a little thickening on one side of his thumb, and that is a sure sign that he is one or the other." Or to a patient he would say, "You are a soldier, and you have served in Bermuda as a non-commissioned officer," and then, turning to the students, he would point out that the man came into the room without taking off his hat, as he would enter an orderly room; that his manner showed that he was a noncommissioned officer and that a rash he had on his forehead was known only in Bermuda.

DR. E. L. RIVENBURGH, of Chicago
is Now at Oriental Hotel, Peterborough
Where He Will Remain for a Few Weeks to Cure Those Afflicted With Stammering or Any Form of Impediment in Speech

Stuttering Stammering Hesitancy Lisping Suction and Exhausted Breath	Nasal Sound Improper Articulation Vocal Afflictions	And all Impediments in Speech Where there is no Malformation of the Vocal Organs

TO THE AFFLICTED

My method for the cure of Stammering and all Vocal defects is original, and, as I am the author of a book entitled "Stammering, Its Cause and Cure," I claim to thoroughly understand the nature of the voice and the proper method for the practical cultivation of the same. During my past 40 years' practice, I have travelled extensively through the Western and Middle States and have been located in Toronto, Canada, for the past two years, and have treated over three thousand patients, all of whom, I am pleased to state, can testify to their permanency of cure.

My method removes the CAUSE of Stammering, and therefore the cure is permanent.

The only SCIENTIFIC and SUCCESSFUL method known and practised.

I WARRANT to cure the worst case of stammering in from one to four weeks' time.

If you have tried to be cured and are not, remember I GUARANTEE to cure.

I have made the treatment of STAMMERING and all DEFECTS IN SPEECH A SPECIALTY for the past FORTY YEARS, and have cured over 3,000 cases.

No medicine given or surgical operations performed. No silence, heating time or inflating of the lungs.

My method has never failed. Below may be found testimonials:

Toronto, January 15th, 1910

I have visited the Toronto Institute for the Over[illegible]ing of Impediments in Speech, conducted by Dr. Rivenburgh, 305 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, and I saw his process of dealing with six students who were present. I have personally given a great deal of attention to defects in speech, and the psychological methods of removing them, and I'm glad to be able to state that I believe Dr. Rivenburgh's work is conducted on true Educational principles. JAMES L. HUGHES, Chief Inspector of Schools.

Toronto, Ont., March 7th, 1910.

This is to certify that I have been a very bad Stammerer for the past 30 years, at times so bad that I could scarcely utter a word, and as a consequence, I was seriously handicapped in life. I had been under treatment several times, but with little or no success, and had become very sceptical about ever finding a cure. I was, however, a short time ago induced to give Dr. Rivenburgh's method a trial, and I am not sorry that I did so, for in a very short time, under his instructions, I found that I could talk and read easily and fluently, and life began to look brighter. I firmly believe that any one, no matter how badly afflicted, may be cured in a very short time if they will follow the doctor's instructions, which are practical and easy to acquire.

Remember, Dr. Rivenburgh will be at the Oriental Hotel, Peterborough, for the next two weeks.

INDIAN PASSION PLAY

B. C. REDMEN HARD AT WORK ON 1911 PERFORMANCE.

Remarkable Production Has Taken Place at Chilliwack Every Other Year Under the Direction of Priests—Play Is In the Form of Tableaux Around Which Spectators Walk In Chanting Procession—One In 1911.

As wonderful as any Passion Play at Oberammergau is the representation of the great tragedy by British Columbia Indians. This is given every second year and arrangements are already well in hand for the 1911 performance near Vancouver, B. C.

Tribesmen from many coast sections of that rim of the British Empire already are actively rehearsing their parts and next summer on the Pacific coast will be memorable for what will undoubtedly be the best of the extraordinary series of passion plays given by the aborigines of Canada's western-most province. The production will take place at one of the little Roman Catholic missions, that gleam, white and peaceful, at the feet of the spruce-clad mountains of the coast range. Priests who have spent their lives devotedly winning redskins from their old faiths, who have put down dog-eating and devil-dancing, are now busy with the preliminary preparations for what will undoubtedly be one of the most eventful religious celebrations on the American continent.

It is not long since I saw the passion tableaux presented in the little town of Chilliwack, a few miles from Vancouver, says a writer in The Montreal Standard. There, near the banks of the Fraser, which flows yellow to the gulf of Georgia, was given a solemn, inspiring spectacle, impossible to be seen in any other part of the American continent. To the Garden City of British Columbia, as they call Chilliwack, outspread at the foot of white-topped Mountain Cheam, came 3,000 Indians. They included the remnants of thirty tribes, all that are left of the descendants of the army of redmen that owned the land previous to the appearance of the Spaniards and Captain Cook and Captain Vancouver.

This Passion play of the west is vastly different from that given at the quaint old European village. The Roman Catholic fathers, indeed, say that it is a teaching of the gospel by means of tableaux representing the great passion.

"We teach the great central truths of Christian faiths by a combination of the powers of the church and the stage," said one open-minded missionary.

"The tableaux, or plays if you will have it so," remarked another father, "is intended to be an object lesson for the Indians, who look upon the production with greatest reverence. It is the quickest and most effectual way in which to educate them in the various episodes of our Redeemer's passion. Our Indians are just like little children. It is easier to train them by the eye and personal interest than by the printed book."

Indians took part in thirteen tableaux of the Passion of Our Lord. It was at three in the afternoon of a sunny summer day that the great festival commenced, a replica of which will be given next year. The fathers had held special services in the reservation for five days previously, bringing the Indians up to the proper state of mind for the solemn occasion. As the hour struck the multitude of red men and women took their places in the long procession which was to pass around each group. There were old patriarchs and wrinkled dames who saw the light before Queen Victoria went to the throne of Great Britain; there were young mothers with papooses on their backs, their stolid [illegible] hands by their sides; young dashing bucks and round limbed, black-eyed maidens and hundreds of neatly-dressed school children.

Before the procession started a priest addressed the Indians in Chinook, the language of barter between whites and reds on the northern Pacific coast. Some Indians from the interior did not understand this and for their benefit the address was translated into "Stalo."

"As you pass each group representing the passion and death of our blessed Lord and Saviour, remember your sins," said the father impressively.

To the sound of a weird chant the cortage began its march. An Indian called out to the spectators that the march was styled "The Way to the Cross," whither the procession led. Thomas Michael, a widely known Indian of the Sechelt tribe, led the way carrying the heavy cross. Behind the uplifted emblem of Christianity walked sisters in black and mission girls in light-colored frocks. Then followed the representatives of the thirty tribes, each with the chief at the head, in tribal order. The priests walked between the lines and encouraged the chanting, which was kept up continuously for a couple of hours or more.

During all this time the Sechelt Indians and others who composed the thirteen tableaux, had to remain posed, while the great procession passed slowly from group to group. The Indians posed as if cut in stone for a period which no white man could emulate.

The first tableau showed St. Peter, St. James and St. John asleep in the Garden of Gethsemane, with Jesus Christ praying. Next came the arrest of Jesus, with Judas and servants portrayed by Indians. Groups 3, 4 and 5 depicted the judgment of Pilot, the scourging by his order and the crowning with thorns. Ecce Homo Pontius Pilate, showing Jesus to the people, was next strikingly represented and then the procession passed on to view Christ falling under the burden of the heavy cross, his meeting with the Virgin Mary, his condoling with the women and St. Veronica anointing his bleeding feet. Then came No. 11, stripping the clothes off Christ preparatory to his crucifixion, the crucifixion itself, and finally No. 13, the death of Christ.

The last picture was taken part in by all the Indians who had figured in the preceding 12. The figure on the cross was of course not human, but looked truly life-like. The crown was portrayed with wonderful skill. The cross was hollowed and contained machinery to operate a vessel of red fluid, which represented Christ's blood. Leading from this vessel were lead tubes, all controlled from the bottom. A string pulled at the foot of the cross caused the blood to appear on the forehead and then on the hands and feet. Finally the Roman soldier plunged his sharp-pointed spear into the side and the blood gushed forth. All the Indians knelt while this scene was being enacted and Father Rhor gave an explanation in Chinook. He told in pathetic language of the dreadful agony endured and drew lessons from the greatest passions in history. Many of the redmen wept copiously.

TRAGEDY OF A STAMP.

This Canadian Twelve-Penny Black Had an Adventurous Career.

In the year of 1851 a 12 penny black Canadian postage stamp was printed by the Government of Ottawa. The public did not regard this souvenir with favor so few were issued. One of these stamps was sent to the Hamilton postoffice, where it was sold to an old gentleman, who said it was a shame to print the Queen's picture on a stamp that might be handled by profane hands. Tenderly the gentleman put it on a parcel, sending it to a friend in the United States.

Here, in the waste basket, it lay for some time until it was found by a boy who had started stamp collecting. He quickly transferred it to his album. After a time, despairing of getting a good collection, and his fever somewhat abating, he sold them to a dealer. The new owner on looking at the catalogue, found that what he had paid $5 for was worth $25. Accidentally this stamp was slipped into a 25-cent packet, and sent to a dealer residing in Hamilton. When the latter opened the packet, he was astonished to find such a valuable stamp, and being honest, wrote his friend to inform him of what had happened, offering him $1,200 for it. The offer was accepted and the stamp again changed hands.

By this time the stamp had increased in value, and not a few came from a distance to look at the treasure. One day an English nobleman, who, through a Canadian friend, had heard of the stamp, offered $1,500, which offer was accepted. The English lord, falling in love with an American heiress, and wishing to gain the favor of her brother, presented him with the stamp as a token of his esteem. Here, in its new and luxurious American home, it came to a sad end, for one day the maid, by mistake, swept the stamp, which had accidentally fallen out of the album, into the fire. In an instant the stamp, which thousands had heard of and longed for, went up in smoke to the broad blue sky, leaving not a trace behind.

Holman Hunt and Canada.

The London Chronicle recalls an interesting episode in the career of the late Holman Hunt, whose pictures attracted wide attention at Toronto Exhibition. "There was," it says, "a period in his career when he contemplated emigrating to Canada as a farmer. It was shortly after the establishment of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. The work of the new artists was the subject of an avalanche of hostile criticism, and The Times—in an article published in 1851—singled out the paintings of Millais and Holman Hunt for particular condemnation. Affected simplicity, senile imitations of a cramped style, false perspective, crude colors, morbid infatuation, and the sacrifice of beauty, truth, and genuine feeling to mere eccentricity, were among the vices with which the unfortunate artists were charged.

"Hunt was in despair, and threatened to leave the country, while Millais was in a state of equal dejection. Hearing of this, Coventry Patmore wrote to Ruskin begging him to use his influence on behalf of the traduced artists. Immediately afterwards Ruskin wrote two letters to The Times, in which he vindicated both Hunt and Millais from the attacks of the critic. 'There has been nothing in art so earnest or so complete as these pictures since the days of Albert Durer,' he wrote. The letters came, as Hunt himself said, as thunder out of a clear sky, and they created a revolution in public feeling. Hunt abandoned his intention of emigrating, and set to work again, while Millais began his 'Ophelia'."

Enlightened.

"Before I married," said Mr. Henpeck, "I didn't know what it meant to support a wife."

"I presume you know now."

"Yes, indeed. I looked up the word 'support' in the dictionary and discovered that one of its meanings is 'endure.'"

CURED OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 9

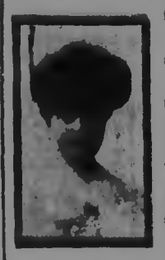
By Ruth Cameron

I HAVE had everything that life has to offer.

By every rule and standard of the world I should have been happy.

But the only happiness I have known has been in anticipation — in anticipation of the things that I expected to bring happiness — and that did not.

Such is the recently published statement of a young woman in the prime of life and health, called by many critics "the most beautiful woman in the world," possessed of a magnificent talent, and plentifully supplied with all the good things that come out of the flesh pots of Egypt.



In other words, the grand opera singer, Lina Cavalieri.

There are just forty-eight words in that statement, and yet it appeals to me as one of the greatest and most thought-provoking essays on the nature of happiness that has been published for many years.

It seems to me that if any discontented person who reads this, provided his discontent comes from dissatisfaction with his equipment, his possessions or his opportunities, and is not the divine discontent of aspiration, would cut out that confession of Cavalieri's and paste it where he can see it daily, that might help some.

The preachment, that happiness is more a state of mind than a matter of possession or position, is so familiar as to be almost a bromide.

And as an abstraction I suppose most of us accept it.

But when it comes to the concrete, I don't imagine there are many of us who don't look longingly at those who have wealth or beauty or talent, or whatever is to us the most desirable thing, and sigh out, "How happy they must be."

All this doesn't mean, of course, that wealth and talent and beauty and the fleshpots aren't things to be desired.

Nor that they are incompatible with happiness.

But just that they aren't sure to bring happiness.

Just that it is possible for one who has none of them to break bread daily with that much wooed but very elusive Lady Happiness, and for one who has them all, to pass his life in the courting of her and never catch a glimpse of anything but her pale ghost, Anticipation.

I'm sorry for Cavalieri. I'm sorry that, with no apparent external barrier between her and happiness, there seems to have been something within herself that makes it impossible for her to find it.

But she surely has not suffered in vain, if, through her confession, those of us who are apt to fancy that if we had this or that or the other thing we would be "perfectly happy," may realize anew and with a twentieth century application, the old truth that

"A MAN'S LIFE CONSISTETH NOT IN THE ABUNDANCE OF THINGS WHICH HE POSSESSETH."

Elusive $30,000,000 Is Hid In Sunken Galleon Been Sought For Years

Edinburgh, Oct. 22.—A wonderful tale of $30,000,000 in sunken treasure, a story that for 300 years has fired the imagination of English adventurers and cost them much daring effort, has finally been proved unfounded by the recent diving operations in the harbor of Tobermory, on the west coast of Scotland. Although the most advanced means have been used for months past, with suction pumps supplementing the efforts of experienced divers, practically no money has been found in or near the wreck of the Duke of Florence, one of the largest and finest galleons in the Spanish Armada which a Scotchman blew up off Castle Duart in 1588.

The Duke of Florence was the chief ship in the Tuscan division of the Armada fleet. She was built of African oak, was of 911 tons burden, was armed with 52 guns, was manned by 386 sailors and 100 marines, and was commanded by Capt. Pereira. Of the crew only three sailors survived the explosion. In her treasure chest there were, it long has been the legend, 30,000,000 pesos, or pieces-of-eight, of about the size of an American dollar. This amount of coin would have weighed 750 tons, leaving little room for men and horses, stores, guns and ammunition.

HISTORIC MARINE TRAGEDY

Every American schoolboy knows the disastrous story, the historic tragedy of the Armada—how the great Spanish fleet, after the running fight of the English Channel with Effingham and his captains, anchored off the coast of Flanders when Drake's fireships approached the 120 ships left in the Armada slipped their cables and fled up the North Sea. More than half were wrecked, some on the Scotch coast, some on the west shore of Ireland, and one away up between Orkney and Shetland. Only fifty-three ships ever got back to Spain. The Duke of Florence, after safely rounding the north of Scotland, put into the Bay of Tobermory for food and rigging.

The captain would have seized by force what he needed but for Sir Lauchlan Maclean of Castle Duart, who trained a cannon on the ship. The captain then agreed to pay for what he wanted, partly in money and partly by landing his marines to fight Maclean's enemies—the Maclan and Macdonald clans. Maclean was in the midst of his fighting when the Spaniard, having replenished and refitted, prepared to sail.

He got his soldiers back on board by a pretext, but Maclean seized three Spanish officers as hostages. Pereira as his part seized Donald Glas of Morven, who had come on ship to collect for Maclean. Scarcely had the vessel weighed anchor when Glas fired the powder magazine, and perished with the rest. Several horses swam ashore and their descendants now form a well marked breed of West Highland ponies.

According to a Scotch correspondent of the London Times, who gives a full history of the wreck and all that has since transpired, the first attempt to get treasure from the ship was made in 1665. The wreck, which was sunk in only 11 fathoms, had been the property by virtue of his office, of the Duke of Lennox, Great Admiral of Scotland, but in 1641 he made over his interest to the Marquis of Argyll, reserving only one hundredth share of any treasure that might be recovered.

A second attempt was made in 1678, and others in 1680, 1683, and 1694. There is a tradition that in 1688 a Swedish engineer went down in a diving bell and got considerable treasure. In 1730 gold and silver coins were recovered, and also a fine bronze gun of 1304, now at Inveraray Castle. In 1740 more guns were brought up, among them a French field piece carrying the device of Benvenuto Cellini.

RECENT FINDINGS

There was no further search until 1872, when the Duke of Argyll sent down divers who got nothing but a brass stanchion and a few pieces of wood. The present efforts at recovery are at the hands of Captain Burns of Glasgow, who began operations in 1903. He has spent much money to very little effect, having got a lot of historic relics in the shape of odds and ends, but less than a hundred of the cherished silver coins. Nothing in the way of a strong room or treasure chest has been discovered. There were brought up an apothecary's mortar of gun metal, copper, powder scoops, a copper frying pan, a brass strainer, two blue porcelain jars, two brass compasses, and several very heavy black glass bottles of Japanesse decoration, though how Japanese ware got to Europe in the sixteenth century is a mystery. One bronze breech loading cannon, four and a half feet long, was recovered. The half pound shot was still in it, and the breech piece contained its charge of powder, no longer black but yellow, of sulphury smell. Straight grooved muskets were brought up and other weapons, and several round stone cannon balls. Such human bones as were found have been sent to Spain for honorable burial there.

Vibrant Nerve Force Supplided to Man

(From "Man's Maladies.")

Without stamina, man is a failure. What is stamina? It is constitutional vigour-health. It is keen, responsive, vibrant nerve force, that gives wonderful inner strength of will, sustains a sound body, supports a wise mentality, makes money and keeps friends. Keen, strong, sensitive nerves makes stamina and with it man can excel in business, sport, pleasure and social favour. Without it he is apt to be weak voiced, weak memoried, feeble in motion, with cold hands, cold feet, nervousness, timidity, fear without cause, trembling, melancholy, pain in the back of head, neurasthenia and a general lack of grit, courage and nerve so that it is impossible to act naturally under all circumstances, as a man, with stamina should. It should be the aim of every man to correct the condition responsible for failure and unhappiness, for it can be done by the simple fulfillment of nature's law that the nerves receive their nourishment through the blood, which enables the nerve fluids to recover thedaily waste which is constantly taking place. The nerve fluids and body tissues undergo constant changes, and unless the supply is equal to the demand the stream of health ebbs low, and misery prevails.

Astonishing strength, nerve force and poise is quickly restored by the following valuable formula which anyone can prepare in the privacy of home.

First, obtain three ounces of syrup sarsaparilla compound in a six ounce bottle; add one ounce of compound fluid bamwort, shake well, and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce tinc. nux cadomene compound (not cardamom) and one ounce compound essence cardiol. Mix. Shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring.

The above ingredients, except the syrup, are rate concentrations of purest drugs without opiates and are used for various prescriptions.

Coffee is one of nature's best gifts to mankind. Daily it brings comfort and solace to Millions without any injurious effects.

Seal Brand Coffee

is the product of the best upland plantations. It is a natural, pure, undoctored Coffee. The kind that is good to drink.

Inspection Of Scugog Waters Good Work Is Being Done

(Port Perry Star)

Something over a year ago a deputation from Port Perry went to Fenelon Falls to interview Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canalas. The purpose of that visit was to induce the Government to build a dam at Lindsay, as the initial step in conserving the waters of Lake Scugog. That dam is built, and is a creditable piece of work that will last many generations. In the actual results for Scugog and Port Perry there is still room for improvement, because the water is not kept level with the dam, but is being used for industrial purposes by a mill at Lindsay.

Our member of Parliament, Mr. Fowke, has been advised of this condition of affairs quite frequently, and he has busied himself to find out what steps would be necessary to meet the reasonable demands of Port Perry people. With a view to discovering the actual conditions a trip was proposed and undertaken the other day, from Port Perry to Lindsay by boat.

This party went on a little steam craft called the Ella Mae, drawing about three feet, six inches of water. We managed to reach Lindsay about six o'clock, discovering on the way that the water was quite shallow in many places, so hollow that the boat was often scraping along the bottom.

Mr McClellan took in the situation thoroughly. He stood in the front of the boat all the way, and when he reached Lindsay had a proper appreciation of the actual conditions, and probably had made up his mind to the remedies necessary to apply.

When we reached Lindsay we found that the water was ten inches below the top of the dam. The first and most important step to be taken must necessarily be to maintain the water at its highest possible level with the appliances now at hand.

This Mr McClellan has definitely promised shall be done, and that no water shall be used for milling or other purposes unless there is an actual overflow of water. A man will be put in charge of the dam whose only interest will be to see that the laws of the canal system are enforced.

So much is definitely promised and the proposition is thoroughly reasonable. It would not be wise to try other plans before the appliances already at hand, and produced at a great cost, have been properly tested.

It is certain that the new dam has not been properly tested, because (if report be true) the water was higher at the dam the day the trip was taken than it had been for some time previous, with no rainfall to cause the change.

Some other assistance has been promised, to increase the utility of Lake Scugog, but these you will appreciate better after you have taken the trip we took to Lakefield and back next day.

An acetylene gas buoy or some other such light will be placed at the shallows at the foot of Scugog Island. These gas buoys only need lighting once in sixty days, and give an excellent light.

Buoys similar to these are to be placed in Lake Scugog between Lindsay and Port Perry, and when the channel is thus marked a big boat will be used to force as deep a passage as possible.

The trip, and its results, is regarded by the Port Perry deputation with every satisfaction. Mr. Fowke's interest in the matter is appreciated, and there is a certainty that the work outlined will be carried out because it is in eminently practical hands, when under the control of Supt McClellan. He is a man of very shrewd, common-sense, who understands his work, and puts his whole life into it.

The Catholic Church At Kinmount Was Dedicated

(Lindsay Post)

A very interesting ceremony took place at Kinmount on Wednesday morning, when the pretty little Roman Catholic church, which has been erected in the village, was dedicated to the service of Almighty God, by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, of Peterborough, assisted by the following clergy: Venerable Archdeacon Casey of Lindsay, Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Peterborough; Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, of Ennismore; Rev. Father McGuire, of Downeyville; Rev. Father Galvin, parish priest of Galway, and Kinmount.

The ceremony of first blessing the interior and exterior of the edifice was performed by Bishop O'Connor, as well as the blessing of the altar and the dedication of the church to St. Patrick. High Mass was celebrated by Ven. Archdeacon Casey, and the choir of St. Joseph's church, Bobcaygeon, rendered excellent music. Mrs. Stewart presided at the organ. Solos were rendered by Mr. Chas. Stewart.

The sermons for the occasion were delivered by Rev. Fr. O'Brien, pastor of the Sacred Heart church, Peterborough, and it was a masterly discourse on the church.

During the services a most solemn and impressive ceremony took place, when about forty-five children received their first Holy Communion, and also received the Sacrament of Confirmation at the hands of the Bishop.

His Lordship the bishop then addressed the congregation, referring to the significance of the ceremonies performed during the day, and he congratulated the good people of the parish on possessing such a handsome church in which to assist at the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. The cost of the structure was $3,000, of which $1,000 had already been paid and His Lordship felt sure that the congregation would generously help their pastor in clearing off the indebtedness.

The pretty little altar in the church was the gift of Messrs. John, Charles and Sylvester Doherty, of Kinmount.

There was a large congregation present during the services, not only from the village, but also from other points.

The new church is a neat little brick structure, standing on an eminence south of the village and overlooking Burnt River. The corner stone was laid on Victoria Day of this year by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor of Peterborough.

BYLAW TO PROVIDE $20,000 FOR WATERWORKS PURPOSES PASSES

Was Put Through at Special Meeting of City Council Last Evening---Some Discussion Between Chairman of the Water Commissioners and Ald. Hicks.

At a special meeting of the City Council last evening, at which there were present, His Worship the Mayor, Ald. Phelan, Batten, Graham, Metheral, Gillespie, Bradburn, Duncan Duffus, Hicks and Ald. Butler, who came in a few minutes before adjournment. A by-law was passed authorizing the issuing of debentures to twenty thousand dollars, for waterworks purposes. This is the by-law that was in its second reading at the meeting on Monday night when the Commissioners left and information that some of the members of the Council wished to know, could not be ascertained, so the by-law was left over until this evening.

"There has been no proportion of the contingent fund set apart," Ald. Bradburn asked Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Water Commissioners "for this work, namely the completion of the new dam?"

"The contingent fund was intact," the chairman stated, "not more than $5,000 could be used for any one requirement without the consent of the Council."

Ald. Hicks thought that the citizens would like to know why they are now paying rates and raising surpluses for the benefit of future ratepayers.

Mr. Matthews said he couldn't see the object of the meeting. Probably it was just as well that the Water Commissioners did go away the other evening, as the aldermen were given a better chance to discuss the situation. If the Commissioners weren't doing what was right, then they shouldn't be there. However, he believed that all the discussion by some aldermen was to impress the ratepayers at this particular time of the year, that they were particularly anxious as to their interests. Mr. Matthews explained that this $20,000 was to take the place of money spent for specific purposes. Mr. Matthews said that he was not familiar with the working of the Council and thought that the by-law had passed until later informed.

Ald. Hicks stated that every committee meeting and every session was fully reported by the papers and if the same opportunity was given by the Water Commissioners, then the public would know what is being done.

Mr. Matthews was again to his feet and remarked that the meetings of the Commissioners were always open to the Council, and to the Press, and the minutes could be read any time. He was glad to see Ald. Hicks taking such an interest in the last stages of a dying year. Ald. Hicks reiterated by saying that he was merely after information. The Commissioners said that they would answer all questions to the best of their ability, but there was no more discussion and the by-law was passed in the usual manner.

A by-law authorizing the City Trust Commissioners to sell a piece of property at George and Romaine streets for the sum of three hundred dollars to the local Chicle Co., also passed its several readings.

A by-law authorizing the execution of an agreement for electric light fixtures for the new Public Library, was put through.

The Council then adjourned until the call of the Mayor.

REMEMBERED BY PUPILS AND STAFF OF BUSINESS COLLEGE

Miss Theresa Hurley, Who is Leaving City to Accept a Position in London Was Honoured by a Presentation and Address.

HAS BEEN POPULAR

On Wednesday afternoon, at the conclusion of the day classes, the teachers and pupils of the Business College assembled to say farewell to Miss Theresa Hurley, a member of the college staff, who is leaving the city to accept a similar position on a Business College staff in London.

The following address read by Miss Madge Graham and the presentation, a gold bar pin, set with turquoise matrix, was made by Mr. Raymond Clancy.

To Miss Theresa Hurley, teacher, Peterborough Business College—

Dear Miss Hurley,—We, the teachers and pupils of the Peterborough Business College, have heard with much regret that you are leaving us for London; while congratulating you on your promotion, we cannot but feel that London's gain is Peterborough's loss. Your untiring efforts, on our behalf, have not been unappreciated by us, nor will the days made brighter by your genial kindness, be soon forgotten. Therefore, as a remembrance of your P. B. C. friends, and as a slight token of our esteem, we ask you to accept this pin.

Signed on behalf of the teachers and pupils of the Peterborough Business College.

Madge Graham,
Cecil White,
J. A. McKone.

To Miss Hurley everything proved a complete surprise. She thanked the staff and pupils for their kindness, and their expressions of esteem, and assured them that her work as teacher on the college staff had always afforded her much pleasure and that it was with no little regret that she now severed her connections with the college teachers and pupils.

Miss Hurley leaves on Monday for London.

CITY COUNCIL PASS RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE AT LATE CITIZEN'S DEATH

Members Pass It by a Standing Vote—Late James Stevenson's Death is a Great Loss to Community.

WORK APPRECIATED

A resolution of condolence was passed at a special meeting of the City Council last evening, to the family of the late James Stevenson, ex-M.P. and assuring them that the work he did for Peterborough was appreciated and would not soon be forgotten. It was moved by Ald. Phelan and seconded by Ald. Batten and passed by the Council, all the members standing.

That this Council desires to place on record its appreciation of the services rendered to the community by the late James Stevenson, who passed away on Tuesday last at the age of 86 years. During his long residence in this municipality of seventy years, Mr. Stevenson took a leading part in business life and was foremost in advancing the interests of the city. He was Mayor of Peterborough first in 1854 and in all served ten years as head of the Council, besides being a member of the Council in other years, and served the municipality as a City Trust Commissioner for forty-nine years, a large part of that time as chairman of the Commission. He also for two years represented this constituency in the Parliament of the Dominion, during which he was influential in securing the building of the Trent Waterway, and as a member of the Board of Education for over fifty years, a director of the Horticultural Society, a member of the Nicholls Hospital Board, and in other positions he rendered the community valuable services. At a time when the foundations of the prosperity of Peterborough were being laid Mr. Stevenson was active in securing railway facilities and manufacturing industries, and his efforts were valuable in the development of the city. Although during the past few years Mr. Stevenson had retired from active business, the services he rendered this community were most valuable and permanent in their results. We also desire to tender to Mr. Stevenson's family our sympathy, and to assure them that the work he did for Peterborough is appreciated and will not be forgotten."

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE MIDNIGHT SONS.

Lew Fields' colossal musical spectacle, "The Midnight Sons" which has been entitled "a musical moving picture in eight films, with its cast of number of singers, dancers and choruses, wonderful scenic equipment, tuneful score and big moments of real fun was the attraction at the Grand last evening and scored quite the success of the season if the constant outbursts of applause can be taken as a criterion. No more novel or entertaining production has been seen here for many moons and the steady stream of clever specialties that punctuated the action from start to finish kept the audience in a happy mood until the final curtain.

As usual with musical comedies, there is little to the plot. Senator Constant Noyes, following the illustrious example of Teddy Roosevelt, goes hunting in Africa, and on the eve of his departure commends his four (midnight) sons to embark in business. He supplies them with unlimited capital, but makes the provision that unless one of the quartette has doubled his investment on his return the four shall be disinherited. One opens a shoe store, another the Merri Murray theatre and the other pair a summer hotel. The first two enterprises fail, but the hotel scheme succeeds and the heirs are saved.

The scenic investiture is lavish in the extreme. The scene showing the departure of the honeymoon express is the acme of clever stage craft, while the scene in the second half, the interior of the theatre is a spectacular masterpiece. The production is a series of pleasing novelties, interspersed with tuneful music and clever comedy. At times the fun was fast and furious and there never was a dull moment. Miss Kitty Francis as Patsy Burns, a cook of independent tendencies, *which per*sist, was created in New York by Mr. G. W. Monro, who is responsible for the book of the comedy, and her work convulsed the audience.

There is an abundance of tuneful music, one number of the company shaking a march on Blanche Ring by singing her favourite "I've Got Rings on My Fingers."

The production includes a special company of vaudeville artists, who are a treat in themselves.

"The Midnight Sons" is a Shubert production as is "The Yankee Girl," which introduces Blanche Ring here a week from to-night.

INAUGURAL MEETING OF LITERARY SOCIETY OF NORMAL SCHOOL

The Literary Society of the Peterborough Normal School held its inaugural meeting on Friday, Oct 22, with all the officers present.

After the Secretary read his report the meeting discussed school colours and decided to continue the green and gold.

The programme opened with a piano solo pleasingly rendered by Miss Payne. This was followed by addresses from the newly elected officers.

Mr. Clubine, the president, spoke on "The Aims of the Society and the Benefits to be Derived Therefrom." Among other points well worth remembering, he said that the Literary Society would encourage (1) the essay, (2) the debate, (3) the impromptu speech, (4) music, (5) general culture, and pointed out some of the benefits derived from public speaking, showing that we gain thereby efficiency, power of expression, correctness and preciseness of language. We also gain confidence and overcome the fear of hearing our own voices, a very great drawback to an otherwise successful speaker. It will be a most valuable aid in overcoming carelessness in speech and manners, and in training the imagination. The president closed his remarks with an appeal to the Normal students to do all in their power to advance the culture of all with whom they come in contact.

Miss Gordon, the 1st Vice-President, spoke briefly on "The Benefits of the Social Side of the Society." After voicing the appreciation of the Normal students of the welcome given them by the people of Peterborough, she urged all the students to be free in their intercourse with one another, and to be friendly with all.

The 2nd Vice President, Miss Garrow, in a few well-chosen words, pointed out the many advantages to be derived from the debate. Miss Garrow has made arrangements to give a practical illustration of these benefits at an early date.

Mr. Winsor, the Secretary, brought out a number of good points on the value of a musical training to the public speaker. Quality of tone as well as volume are essentials sometimes lacking in the voice of a young speaker. These are obtained by a study of music. The training of the ear, the eye, the hand, and the great cultural value received from the study of music were all pointed out.

The Treasurer, Mr. Bailey, gave a number of good reasons why the essay was an essential means of cultivation in language and thought training.

Miss Helen Allen was called upon for a vocal solo and sang "Jock o' Hazeldean."

Mr. Chisholm congratulated the students on the success of the inaugural meeting, after which Miss Foster gave a humorous selection.

The meeting was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

IMPROVEMENTS

Improvements have been made to the local Grand Trunk station. New eave troughs have been put on and also new window sills put in the building. At the Charlotte street crossing underground pipes, filled with oil, have been installed for the chains which work the gates, to pass through. The oil is for the purpose of keeping the chains from freezing in the winter months. Other winters snow and slush would get in around the chains and made it almost impossible to work the gates, but the new scheme has overcome all the difficulties.

Your Time Is Not Yours

It Belongs to Those Depending on You. For Their Sakes Preserve Health and Strength.

You never thought of it just this way before. While not feeling well you have neglected to take active means of restoring health, thinking all the time that you were the only one to suffer by delay.

Not so. For who among us has not someone depending on him for comfort, happiness or the means of livelihood?

When you lie awake nights, worrying over little things, get nervous and irritable, have indigestion and headaches, you may be sure the nervous system is becoming exhausted.

Time is not yours to delay. You must call a halt to the wasting process. Otherwise you will have a rude awakening some day, when prostrations, paralysis or locomotor ataxia lays you low. For such is the natural and inevitable result of neglected, nervous diseases.

You can restore the nervous system by using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Being composed of Nature's most potent nerve restoratives, it cannot fail to benefit you. Each dose must of necessity bring you nearer to health, strength and vigour.

Mr. William Brandon, Victoria street, Strathroy, Ont., writes: "Before using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food my nervous system seemed all unstrung. I could not sleep, had no appetite, hands and feet were cold, my digestion was poor and I had jerking of the limbs. The first box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food helped me, and I continued until I had taken twenty-four boxes. This treatment has made a radical change in my condition, building up the system and strengthening the nerves."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

LOSS IS $1,500,000

Fire Swept the Down Town District of Victoria.

VALUABLE PAPERS LOST

Entire City Was at One Time Threatened With Annihilation by Flames Which Broke Out In Departmental Store Just Before Midnight—One Newspaper Was Burned Out and Another Endangered.

Victoria, Oct. 26—Victoria on Wednesday night visited by the greatest conflagration in its history, which destroyed an entire block and at one time seemed to threaten annihilation of the city. The loss is variously estimated, being at least $1,500,000 according to an official report.

How the fire started is a mystery. It began in the department store of David Spencer, Ltd., about 11 p.m. The two night watchmen state that they went their rounds as usual at 10.30, but saw nothing wrong. They then went to the depot to have their supper but presently smelled smoke and saw smoke and flames along the east wall of the first and second storey. Some people passing by on the streets turned in the alarm. So rapid was the spread of the fire that when the firemen arrived a few minutes later, the establishment was already a mass of flame.

A splendid fight was made by the brigade, which was assisted by a large number of volunteers from among the citizens who had gathered. A call for help was also sent to the Work Point barracks, and the gunners and engineers at once responded. Some of them were called off to assist in keeping back the crowds, while others assisted the firemen. Others also were posted among the neighboring roofs, where they did good work in putting out the sparks, which had fallen everywhere.

The new high water pressure plant was also called into use for the first time and proved of very great assistance. At times it looked as though a large portion of the city was doomed, but ultimately the fire was confined within the city square in which it started. By three o'clock yesterday morning the flames were under control, but the immense number of people which had assembled stood around until daylight.

From the David Spencer store the blaze spread across to Five Sisters block, an office building with stores below. This place was ablaze by midnight. H. Young & Co.'s dry goods store was the next to catch, then the adjoining offices and the Royal Bank buildings across the street were also for a time in considerable danger. The Driard Hotel on Broad street presents a rather unkempt appearance to-day, with all of the plate glass front smashed, but otherwise it is not seriously damaged.

The Times' newspaper, which was surrounded on three sides by the David Spencer block, escaped the flames, but the damage which it has suffered from water is very considerable. The newspaper machinery has been rendered temporarily useless, and The Times is being got out in the office of The Colonist.

No deaths occurred in the fire, but Mrs. Samuel Share, wife of the proprietor of the Bismarck Hotel, after arousing everybody in the building, collapsed from the excitement, and died in a few minutes. Fire Chief Davis was also hurt by a nail, which went through his boot, and he will be lame for some time.

Among the losses to be recorded are a large number of legal documents, belonging to the City of Victoria, which were in the office of Mason & Mann, formerly city solicitors. The plans of the new isolation hospital and the new court house in Vancouver were also destroyed. These were in the office of Thomas Hooper, architect, in the fire-swept block.

The Colonist newspaper building was for a time in danger, so much that the files and valuable business papers were removed to a place of safety. The building, however, was not damaged, but the interior was gutted.

Too Rich For His Pocket.

After the war with Spain a party of Americans, including Colonel Hecker of Detroit, went to Cuba on a tour of inspection. They had with them a negro messenger named Frank. One day Frank got into a place where they sell ices and cakes on the Prado, in Havana, and bought a plate of ice cream. That was 20 cents. The waiter handed around some cakes. Frank took a few. The cakes were passed for a second and a third time. On each occasion Frank helped himself liberally. Then he called for his check. It was $1.80, American. Colonel Hecker and some friends, who were at an adjoining table, heard Frank yell.

"What is the matter, Frank?" asked the colonel.

"Why didn't you stop me?" sobbed Frank. "Why didn't you stop me? Doan you know dis yer nigger could eat enough of dis yer stuff to bankrupt the hull gov'ment?"—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

A Curious Remedy.

Perhaps the most curious remedy for seasickness ever prescribed was that arranged by Sir Theodore Mayern for the English princess royal when she crossed to Belgium in 1612. Cinnamon, coriander, anise, ambergris, musk and sugar were to be made up into long tubes for her to munch on the voyage; a plaster of balsam of Peru, gum mastich and laudinum was to be applied to the pit of the stomach, and in addition she was to inhale the comforting vapors arising from a hash of toast, orange and citron peel, roses, lavender and cloves mingled with wine, cinnamon water and elder flower vinegar.

The Reproof.

It was in the midst of the football season, and the students of Professor Blank's class, well aware that their lesson had been neglected, were prepared for reproof, but not for just the way in which it came.

At the end of the hour he slammed down his book on the desk and exclaimed:

"Well, that's the worst recitation I ever listened to! Why, I've actually done nine-tenths of it myself!"—Youth's Companion.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"We treat him," I answered hotly, "as the man deserves to be treated who abuses the hospitality of a stranger, and places himself in the position of a common thief."

The Prince shrugged his shoulders lightly, and helped himself to one of my cigarettes.

"You are very young, Mr. Ducaine," he said, looking at me thoughtfully. "You have no doubt your career to make in the world. So, in a greater sense of the word, have I. I propose, if you will allow me, to be quite frank with you."

"I have no wish for your confidence, Prince," I answered. "They cannot possibly concern or interest me."

"Do not be too sure of that," he said. "Like all young men of your age, you jump too readily at conclusions. It is very possible that you and I may be of service to one another, and I may add that those who have been of service to the Prince of Malors have seldom had cause to regret it."

"This conversation," I interposed, "seems to me to be beside the point. I have no desire to be of service to you. My inclinations are rather the other way."

"The matter may become more clear if you will only curb your impatience, my young friend," the Prince said. "It is only my ambition to serve my country, to command the gratitude of a nation which to-day regards both me and mine with mingled doubt and suspicion. I have ambitions, and I should be an easy and generous master to serve."

"I am honoured with your confidence, Prince, but I still fail to see how these matters concern me," I said, setting my teeth hard.

"With your permission I will make it quite clear," he continued. "For years your War Office has suffered from constant dread of an invasion by France. The rumours of our great projected manoeuvres in the autumn have inspired your statesmen with an almost paralysing fear. They see in these merely an excuse for marshalling and equipping an irresistible army within striking distance of your Empire. Personally I believe that they are entirely mistaken in their estimate of my country's intentions. That, however, is beside the mark. You follow me?"

"Perfectly," I assured him. "This is most interesting, although as yet it seems to me equally irrelevant."

"Your War Office," the Prince continued, "has established a Secret Council of Defence, whose only task it is to plan the successful resistance to that invasion, if ever it should take place. You, Mr. Ducaine, are, I believe, practically the secretary of that Council. You have to elaborate the digests of the meetings, to file schemes for the establishment of fortifications and camps; in a word, the result of these meetings passes through your hands. I will not beat about the bush, Mr. Ducaine. You can see that you have something in your keeping which, if passed on to me, would accomplish my whole aim. The army would be forced to acknowledge my claim upon them; the nation would hear of it."

"Well," I asked, "supposing all you say is true? What then?"

"You are a little obtuse, Mr. Ducaine," the Prince said softly. "If twenty thousand pounds would quicken your understanding——"

I picked up a small inkpot from the side of the table and hurled it at him. He sprang aside, but it caught the corner of his forehead, and he gave a shrill cry of pain. He struck a fierce blow at me, which I parried, and a moment later we were locked in one another's arms. I think that we must have been of equal strength, for we swayed up and down the room neither gaining the advantage, till I felt my breath come short and my head dizzy. Nevertheless, I was slowly gaining the mastery. My grasp upon his throat was tightening. I had hold of his collar and tie, and I could have strangled him with a turn of my wrist. Just then the door opened. There was a quick exclamation of horrified surprise in a familiar tone. I threw him from me to the ground, and turned my head. It was Lady Angela who stood upon the threshold.

CHAPTER XIV.

A RELUCTANT APOLOGY. ..

Lady Angela looked at us both in cold surprise.

"Mr. Ducaine! Prince!" she exclaimed. "What is the meaning of this extraordinary exhibition?"

The Prince, whose sang-froid was marvellous, rose to his feet, and began to wipe his forehead with a spotless cambric handkerchief.

"My dear Lady Angela," he said, "I am most distressed that you should have been a witness of this—extraordinary incident. I have been trying to adapt myself to the methods of your country, but, alas! I cannot say that I am enamoured of them. Here, it seems, that gentlemen who differ must behave like dustmen. Will you pardon me if I turn my back to you for a moment? I see a small mirror, and I am convinced that my tie and collar need readjustment."

"But why quarrel at all?" she exclaimed. "Mr. Ducaine," she added, turning coolly to me, "I trust you have remembered that the Prince is my father's guest."

I was speechless, but the Prince himself intervened.

"The blame, if any," he declared, "was mine. Mr. Ducaine appeared to misunderstand me from the first. I believe that his little ebullition arose altogether from too great zeal on behalf of his employers. I congratulate him upon it, while I am bound to deprecate his extreme measures."

"And you, Mr. Ducaine," she asked, turning towards me, "what have you to say?"

"Nothing," I declared, stung by her tone and manner as much as by his coolness, "except that I found the Prince of Malors meddling with my private papers, and subsequently I interrupted him in the offer of a bribe."

The Prince smoothed his necktie, which he had really tied very well, complacently.

"The personal belongings of Mr. Ducaine," he said calmly, "are without interest to me. I fancy that the Prince of Malors can ignore any suggestions to the contrary. As for the bribe, Mr. Ducaine talks folly. I am not aware that he has anything to sell, and I decline to believe him a blackmailer. I prefer to look upon him as a singularly hot-headed and not over-intelligent person, who takes very long jumps at conclusions. Lady Angela, I find my foot much better. May I have the pleasure of escorting you to the house?"

I held my tongue, knowing very well that the Prince played his part solely that I might be entrapped into speech. But Lady Angela seemed puzzled at my silence. She looked at me for a moment inquiringly out of her soft dark eyes. I made no sign. She turned away to the Prince.

"If you are sure that you can walk without pain," she said, "We will not trouble you, Mr. Ducaine," she added as I moved to open the door.

So, they left me alone, and I was not sure whether the honours remained with him or with me. He had never for a moment lost his dignity, nor had he even looked ridiculous when calmly rearranging his tie and collar. I laughed to myself bitterly as I prepared to follow them. I was determined to lay the whole matter before the Duke at once.

As I reached the terrace I saw a man walking up and down, smoking a pipe. He stood at the top of the steps and waited for me. It was Colonel Ray. He took me by the arm.

"I have been waiting for you, Ducaine," he said. "I was afraid that I might miss you, or I should have come down."

"I am on my way to the Duke," I said, "and my business is urgent."

"So is mine," he said grimly. "I want to know exactly what has passed between you and the Prince of Malors."

"I am not at all sure, Colonel Ray," I answered, "that I am at liberty to tell you. At any rate, I think that I ought to see the Duke first."

His face darkened, his eyes seemed to flash threatening fires upon me. He was smoking so furiously that little hot shreds of tobacco fell from his pipe.

"Boy," he exclaimed, "there are limits even to my forbearance. You are where you are at my suggestion and I could as easily send you adrift. I do not say this as a threat, but I desire to be treated with common consideration. I appeal to your reason. Is it well to treat me like an enemy?"

"Whether you are indeed my friend or my enemy I am not even now sure," I answered. "I am learning to be suspicious of every person and thing which breathes. But as for this matter between the Prince and myself it can make little difference who knows the truth. He shammed a fall over the cliff and a sprained ankle. Lady Angela and I started for the house to send a cart for him, but, before we were halfway across the Park, Grooton fetched me back. I found the Prince examining the papers on which I had been working, and when I charged him with it he offered me a bribe."

"And you?"

"I struck him!"

Ray groaned.

"You struck him! And you had him in your power—to play with as you would. And you struck him! Oh, Ducaine, you are very, very young. I am your friend, boy, or rather I would be if you would let me. But I am afraid you are a blunderer."

I faced him with white face.

"I seem to have found my way into a strange place," I answered. "I have neither wit nor cunning enough to know true men from false. I would have trusted you, but you are a murderer. I would have trusted the Prince of Malors, but he has proved himself a common adventurer. So I have made up my mind that all shall be alike. I will be neither friend nor foe to any mortal, but true to my country. I go my way and do my duty, Colonel Ray."

He blew out dense volumes of smoke, puffing furiously at his pipe for several minutes. There seemed to be many things which he had it in his mind to say to me. But, as though suddenly altering his purpose he stood on one side.

"You shall go your own way," he said grimly. "The Lord only knows where it will take you."

It took me in the first place to the Duke, to whom I recounted briefly what had happened. I could see that my story at once made a deep impression upon him. When I had finished he sat for several minutes in deep thought. For the first time since I had known him he seemed nervous and ill at ease. He was unusually pale, and there were deep lines engraven about his mouth. One hand was resting upon the table, and I fancied that his fingers were shaking.

"The Prince of Malors," he said at last, and his voice lacked altogether its usual ring of cool assurance, "is of Royal blood. He is not even in touch with the political powers of France to-day. He may have been guilty of a moment's idle curiosity—"

The Duke folded his hands nervously together. He looked away from me into the fire.

"It is a very difficult position," he declared, "very difficult indeed. The Prince has been more than a friend to Blenavon. He has been his benefactor. Of course he will deny this thing with contempt. Let me think it out, Ducaine."

"By all means, your Grace," I answered, a little nettled at his undecided air. "So far as I am concerned, my duty in the matter ends here. I have told you the exact concerning it, and it serves to me by no means improbable that the Prince has been in some way responsible for those former leakages."

The Duke shook his head slowly.

"It is impossible," he said.

"Your Grace is the best judge," I answered.

"The Prince was not in the house last night when the safe was opened, he objected.

"He probably has accomplices," I answered. "Besides, how do we know that he was not here?"

"Even if he were," the Duke said, raising his head, "how could he have known the cipher?"

I made no answer at all. It seemed useless to argue with a man who had evidently made up his mind not to be convinced.

"Have you mentioned this matter to any one?" the Duke asked.

"To Colonel Ray only, your Grace," I answered.

"Ray!" The Duke was silent for a moment. He was looking steadily into the fire. "You told Ray what you have told me?"

"In substance, yes, your Grace. In detail, perhaps not so fully."

"And he?"

"He did not doubt my story, your Grace," I said quietly.

The Duke frowned across at me.

"Neither do I, Ducaine," he declared. "It is not a question of veracity at all. It is a question of construction. You are young, and these things are all new to you. The Prince might have been trying you, or something which you did not hear or have forgotten might throw a different light upon his actions and suggestion. I beg that you will leave the matter entirely in my hands."

I abandoned the subject then and there. But as I left the room I came face to face with Blenavon, who was loitering outside. He at once detained me. His manner since the morning had altered. He addressed me now with hesitation, almost with respect.

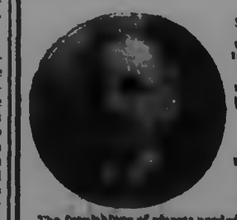
THE PRACTICE of OPTOMETRY



The Science of how to furnish right glasses when needed. Eye Examination to determine the necessity for glasses.

The furnishing of glasses needed has in the past decade become almost an absolute and exact science, which is based upon purely mathematical and optical principals. This is now so firmly established that laws regulating the practice of Optometry are written in the statute books of 31 of the States of America, two of the Provinces of Canada, and in Great Britain. It is a foregone conclusion that similar legislation will be enacted in other States and Provinces. We believe that it is not possible to examine too thoroughly, to make the mathematical calculation too carefully for the eye, when so much comfort, happiness, and ability to earn a livelihood, is so dependent upon such.

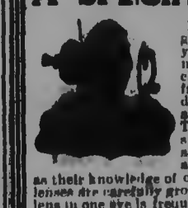
ALWAYS CONSULT
A SPECIALIST



Never select glasses for yourself, and never purchase glasses from a peddling spectacle seller. The stock of such spectacle sellers is as defective as their knowledge of optics. The lenses are carefully ground and the lens in one eye is frequently different from the lens in the other eye.

BEWARE of SPECTACLE PEDDLERS

Wearing them will soon result in pain in the eyes and injury to the sight. Then there is frequently the condition of unequal vision—that is, your eyes may differ in focus and each may require a different, specially prescribed lens. In such cases similar lenses, such as you would select for yourself or a peddler would give you, must of necessity prove injurious to one or other of the eyes. We, on the other hand, have the knowledge and appliances necessary to detect the unequal vision or any other defect and grind the lenses to suit. Nineteenths of the cases of defective vision require glasses ground especially for the patient.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleriver, Que.—"Without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I would not be alive. For five months I had painful and irregular periods and inflammation of the uterus. I suffered like a martyr and thought often of death. I consulted two doctors who could do nothing for me. I went to a hospital, and the best doctors said I must submit to an operation, because I had a tumor. I went back home much discouraged. One of my cousins advised me to take your Compound, as it had cured her. I did so and soon commenced to feel better, and my appetite came back with the first bottle. Now I feel no pain and am cured. Your remedy is deserving of praise."—Mrs. EMMA CHARTRE, Valleyfield, Belleriver, Quebec.

Another Operation Avoided.

Adrian, Ga.—"I suffered untold misery from female troubles, and my doctor said an operation was my only chance, and I dreaded it almost as much as death. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me without an operation."—LIZZIE V. HENRY, R.F.D. 5.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases.

BUT A SHORT JUMP BACKWARD.

Do Indications Point to a Reversion to Primeval Conditions?

Society is going in for roasted peanuts, cabbage, fruits, and other ancient food staples, canapes, caviar and other rich, modern delicacies are being tabood, it seems, as the "spenders" have become distrustful of them. Perhaps we are swerving, preparing to turn back.

Women are breaking into the pursuits of men. In Paris there are many cabwomen and in some of our cities in the west policewomen. There are women lawyers, women barbers, bartenders, farmers, physicians and journalists. Women are smoking cigarettes, and the men, some of them, are trying to break themselves of the habit.

On the other hand men are breaking into the pursuits of women. They are becoming cooks and bottlewashers. In London some of the men do the ironing, the washing, the darning, and the cooking. Many men are marrying for money and living idle lives. Up in the air men are trying to imitate the birds. Down below, in automobiles, they are trying to imitate the wind.

One wonders if we are going back to original conditions. From the working women and the idling men of to-day it is but a short jump backward to the Indians who loitered in the woods while the squaws did all the work. From the women who smoke cigarettes to-day it is but a short step backward to the women who used to smoke clay pipes. Perhaps it won't be long before we are again swinging airily among the trees, from limb to limb, knocking down cocoanuts.

WILL NOT HAVE THEM SPOILED.

Queen Mary a Spartan When it Comes to Keeping Children's Tastes Simple.

When it comes to training her children with simple tastes, Queen Mary, of England, surely has all other royal mothers "stopped." A certain young woman, who is a great favorite with the royal children, whom she knows through their French governess, received an evidence of the length to which the Queen goes in this respect. The young woman in question, when the little Prince John, a special pet of hers, was ill a short time ago, begged to be allowed to send him a Teddy bear, to supplement worn-out one he had been in the habit of taking to bed with him, after the fashion of many children, royal and otherwise.

The Queen consented that the prince should accept the gift, and the friend straightway purchased the largest, fattest and most elaborate Teddy bear possible, which she despatched to the palace. Her surprise was great when the bear came back again to her with a little note from the Queen saying that she always liked the children to have only the most unpretentious toys, and that as Prince John's last Teddy bear was but a quarter of the size of the present one she considered it would be better to have the same kind. The astonished young woman hurriedly exchanged the large, fat bust and costly Teddy for a most modest specimen of the breed.

The same treatment is accorded Princess Mary. Her dolls-house always been of a simple kind, and she is required to make their clothes herself, in the intervals of stitching flannel petticoats for the poor, with which task she occupies much of her time.

The Birth of Reformatories.

The first reform school for juvenile delinquents was probably the one organised at Mettray, near Louvre, France, about the year 1839 by M. de Tete, a noted councillor of Paris. M. de Tete found in some wealthy noblemen the financial assistance he needed to materialize his idea, and the school was started with the most beneficent results. The idea was taken hold of in other quarters not only of France, but of other continental countries and the enthusiasm created by the work resulted in the grand "conference of the reformatory union," the real beginning of our present day work in behalf of juvenile delinquents.

The Hours of the Day.

The ancient Egyptians divided the day and night into twelve hours each, a custom adopted by the Jews and Greeks probably from the Babylonians. The day was first divided into hours in Rome by L. Papirius Cursor, who about B.C. 293 erected a sun dial in the temple of Quirinus. Prior to the invention of water clocks (158 B.C.) the time was called at Rome by public criers. In England in early times the measurement of time was uncertain. One expedient was by wax candles, three inches burning an hour and six wax candles burning twenty-four hours, or a day.

His Last Breath.

The reflections upon the value of breath, writes a correspondent, recall an old riddle which asked what it was that no man wished to take and no man wished to give up. The answer was, His last breath. Charles Lamb had an epicurean desire concerning his own last breath, half of which at any rate comes home to many of us. He ready heard him express the hope that he might draw it in through a pipe and exhale it in a pun. Certainly that would be the most precious breath on record.—London Chronicle

A Rain Trap.

In a time of distressing drought, says a writer in The Yorkshire Post, a harassed amateur agriculturist stepped into a shop to buy a barometer. The shopman was giving a few stereotyped instructions about indications and pressures when the purchaser impatiently interrupted him.

"Yes, yes," said he, "that's all right, but what I want to know is how do you set it when you want it to rain?"

HIRAM CARPENTER'S WONDERFUL CURE OF SKIN DISEASE

After 20 Years of Intense Suffering.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s. psoriasis, and others leprosy, commencing on my scalp; and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there would be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs; feet badly swollen; toe-nails came off; finger-nails dead and hard as a bone; hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. O my God! how I did suffer.

"My sister, Mrs. L. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Several times was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got Cuticura Resolvent, Ointment and Soap. I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Cuticura Resolvent three times a day after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura Ointment morning and evening. Result: returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper. Hiram E. Carpenter, Henderson, N. Y."

"We hereby certify that we are acquainted with the aforesaid Hiram E. Carpenter, and know his condition to have been as stated. We believe his statement to be true in every particular." L. B. Simmons & Son, Merchants; G. A. Thompson, Merchant; A. A. Davis; Millard E. Johnes, Merchant; John Carpenter; A. M. Lethergood, Attorney and Counselor-at-law, all of Henderson, N. Y.

The above remarkable testimonial was written January 19, 1895, and is republished because of the permanency of the cure. Under date of April 26, 1910, Mr. Carpenter wrote from his present home, 510 Walnut St. So. Lansing, Mich.: "I have never suffered a return of the psoriasis and although many years have passed I have not forgotten the terrible suffering I endured before using the Cuticura Remedies."

Since this cure was made by the Cuticura Remedies, they have made their way to every part of the civilized world. A 32-page booklet describing humors and affections of the skin will be mailed free to those desiring further information by the Potter Drug & Chemical Corporation, Boston, U. S. A.

Not So Much of a Joke.

The late Linley Sambourne, the famous Punch cartoonist, began life in an engineering works. When a young man he was always fond of playing practical jokes, and a French draftsman employed at the engineering works often became the butt of his humor. One day Sambourne hit upon the bright idea of nailing the Frenchman's hat down to his desk. He awaited the consequences in high glee. But when lunch time came instead of attempting to tug the hat from the desk, as expected, the French youth calmly took another hat from the peg and went out. Then the future cartoonist looked closely and saw that it was his own hat he had nailed to the desk.

Woman as a Traveler.

When a woman who is traveling is assigned to her room in a hotel she looks up the hotel rules on the door and carefully reads them. When she comes to one as follows, "No washing of clothes permitted in this room," she gives a satisfied sigh. Then she unpacks her trunks, rings for hot water and within an hour has the mirror covered with handkerchiefs pasted there to dry, and has hose, underwear, waists, etc., hanging over the back of every chair. Then she gets out her diary and notes in it how much money she has saved. "There are said to be some very historic places in this town," she notes after detailing her wash, "but I will not have time to see them."

Coral Reefs Inland.

Mention of coral reefs brings to one's mind a picture of palm dotted islets girt with white sands in a tropical sea, but geologists find coral reefs in the midst of great continents. These, of course, belong to a past age of the earth's history, but on that account they are the more interesting. Within late years several remarkable reefs of fossil coral have been explored near Bainbridge, on the Flint River, in Georgia. In one case a very large portion of the reef exposed consisted of coral heads, some of which were more than a foot in diameter. Between twenty-five and thirty species of coral have been recognized in these reefs. They are ascribed to the tertiary age.

No Escape.

"Are you in favor of woman suffrage?" she asked.

"Oh, yes; enthusiastically," he replied.

"Now, I wish you would tell me why you think women ought to forget their children and their household duties and get out into the world to mix up in political affairs. If you know of any good reason"—

"Good heavens! I beg your pardon. I merely said I was in favor of it to avoid arguing with you. Can't a man be safe on any side any more?"

Eternal Lamps.

A common superstition that the ancients possessed the art of making lamps which would burn forever for a long time obtained, and it was claimed that one such lamp was discovered in the tomb of Rosicrucius. Science, however, has long set this, together with other superstitions, forever at rest, since it has been demonstrated that fire will not burn in a chamber from which the air has been exhausted.

A Mighty Mountain Range.

Mount Everest is guarded from approach on either side by Tibet and Nepal, undoubtedly the two most inaccessible countries in the entire earth. The mountain range between Everest and Kangchinjunga contains a series of very high mountains, several of them over 26,000 feet. The lowest of the mountains in this range are higher than Mt. Blanc, in North America.

THIS IS SURELY THE LIMIT.

Hobble Skirt Voluminous Compared With Latest Freak of Fashion.

Take a look at the peach in the lingerie gown who has sauntered in range of a quick-firing camera and is pretending she doesn't know there is a dressmaker's scout within a league. Now that you've looked what do you say she is wearing? A hobble skirt? Jamais! Nothing of the kind! The lady is done up in Turkish pantaloons, the very latest product of that emotional insanity which periodically attacks the gown designers.

With half an eye you can see that the young persons needs only a veil to shroathe the lower part of her face and she might have stepped from the harem of a pasha for a stroll in the streets of modern Stamboul.

The advent of the fashion has stirred the world like trouble in the Balkans. In the news it has crowded for place the rumpus in Spain of the exploits of the bird men. From the Newsky Prospect to Main street in Canandaigua it has stirred rancor and argument in salons and sewing circles. The head of a great church has cautioned the bishops concerning it, they were expected to warn their women parishioners that Turkish pantaloons are going a bit too far.

Aldermen have been asked to introduce ordinances against it, only to find on returning to their homes that Mrs. Alderman has just received one from Paris. Editors have shot ridicule and sarcasm at it. Paragraphers have filed jests at it. Foreign correspondents in their letter have traced its progress like a comet over the face of Europe. You can't beat it. Until the next sarcasm of sartorial insanity comes it will have a place among the models.

The skirt is voluminous and its fullness clings to the figure as Turkish trousers cling. The skirt is caught in at the shoetops to a very narrow hem. This hem is trimmed in some way up the centre, back and front, or it is deliberately tacked just below the knees so that it gives the appearance of trousers.

Usually the skirt is made of satin and chiffon for afternoon affairs, and of white net and tulle garnished with seed pearls and crystals for evening wear; and that's as close as imperfect man can come to describing the freak.

Sports in England.

A diversion little followed in America now, but which still holds its own in England, is the walking or bicycling tour. England is not a country given to sudden crazes in the matter of sports. There are reasons, of course, in which some game like ping-pong or diabolo carries everything before it for the moment and is then as suddenly dropped. But, on the whole, a sport that has once become popular in England remains so. Bicycling is a case in point.

More cycles are being sold in England than ever. They are not perhaps as fashionable as they once were, and the days when cycling in Battersea Park competed with riding in Rotten Row have long gone by. But as the vehicle of the masses the cycle still predominates, and the whole country is a network of cycling clubs whose members organise successive tours of a fortnight or three weeks throughout the summer months.

The English again have always been great pedestrians, and many thousands of them devote their vacation to tramping the Welsh hills or the lake district or Devonshire or some other of the almost countless regions that in England offer one a combination of faultless roads, beautiful scenery, and historic associations. Touring by caravan is not so popular a pastime, but is still not uncommon, and those who once take to it declare that it knocks all other forms of holiday making on the head. And besides all this there are the joys of motoring for those who can afford them, while even a tenth-rate resort boasts of its golf links, its tennis courts, and its cricket club.

A Great Player.

Sir Walter Parratt had an extraordinary memory. Some eight or ten men were assembled one evening in one of the lodges attached to St. Michael's College, Tenbury. Sir Walter Parratt and Herr von Holst played in turn upon the piano such music as was asked for. This went on for some time until at last the chessboard was brought out. Sir Walter then proposed to play two men at chess in consultation, still remaining at the piano and playing from memory what was demanded either from Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin or Mendelssohn. Without even a glance at the chessboard he won the game in an hour.—London Globe.

Royal Diana's Book of Adventure.

The Queen of Portugal's sister, the lovely and adventurous Duchess d'Acosta, has in the press an English volume describing her recent big game hunting expedition in the Congo regions.

The duchess spent nearly a year in the wilds, accompanied only by a maid and a nigger servant. She returned to Italy a few weeks ago with twenty big cases of trophies of the chase and many cinematograph pictures of wild beasts in their native haunts. Her book will be a revelation of woman intrepidity, and will certainly create an enormous amount of interest in royal circles.

Peerless Peninsular

Little Conveniences That Mean Much To The Housewife

A Lady said, not long ago to one of our dealers, that "Peerless Peninsular" Ranges could not have been more conveniently planned if they had been designed by the women who use them.

This was a high compliment, but only indicative of the years of effort to meet all points of convenience that have culminated in the production of our "Peerless" Ranges.

The front Key Plate of the range is fitted with a handle by which it can be raised for broiling and toasting.

The Back of the Oven is Aluminized to reflect light into the usual dark corners.

The Clean-out Door under the oven is where it can be reached without the usual struggle.

The Oven Door drops down level with the oven floor and forms a shelf for basting or inspection of cakes, pies, etc.

The Oven Damper is adjustable—not simply open or shut, but slides so that the heat can be regulated to a degree.

The Oven Thermometer, Peninsular Grate Bars and Low Closet for holding flat irons, pots, pans, etc., are only a few of the other "little things" that you should see before buying your new range. When you do see them, you will buy a "Peerless".

"Peerless Peninsular" is the range shown above.

"Harmony Peninsular" is similar in essentials but more elaborately decorated.

"Constant Peninsular" is different from the others mainly in plainer design and finish.

"Adanac Peninsular" is plain in design with swing door for those who prefer it.

The Result of a Lecture

A Young Professor Gets Off His Best on the Subject of Love

By EVAN HARRINGTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I was but twenty-eight years old when I was called to the chair of mental philosophy in the University of B., a woman's college. I was given to rationalism, materialism and all that group of ideas popular at the time and was fond of embodying them in my lectures to my classes. I dictated these lectures, and they were taken down by the students in blank books. I was lecturing one morning, my subject leading me into something at which the girls pricked up their ears. This was the passage that attracted their attention:

Music is an appeal to the fancy, exciting the imaginative faculty, now soothing the listener into a pleasant languor, as in the case of a lullaby, now stirring the passions, as in the case of martial strains. All our emotions are based on such influences. Love, though far more durable, is apt to be excited in the same way. The imagination is operated on by circumstances. When these circumstances are attractive love is produced; when they are disagreeable they engender hate. Love once excited may absorb one's whole being. But that it is not in itself spiritual—in other words, eternal—is manifest from the fact that it may be repeated again or again. Were this not so the Indian custom of the wife's immolation on the funeral pyre of her husband would be a necessity.

There was no sound in the room except my monotonous dictation and during the pauses at the end of every half dozen words the ripple of a hundred pen points on as many lecture books. I was a bit uneasy at this portion of my discourse, fearing the girls might do or say something that would embarrass me. I was about to proceed after the last word, "necessity," when Kate Swann, the chief mischief maker in the class, laid down her pen and rose from her seat.

"May I ask, professor," she said demurely, while her eyes snapped viciously, "does a sense of justice pertain to the subject we are studying?"

"Certainly."

"Then if love were eternal would it not be just that the husband should immolate himself on the funeral pyre of his wife as well as the wife on the funeral pyre of the husband?"

The class tittered.

"Man," I said, with an affectation of modesty for my sex, "is not supposed to be endowed with as strong, unchanging love proclivities as woman. This is because he is not as emotional. Nevertheless I grant that if love were spiritual, which I consider to be the same as eternal, a husband who lost his wife might do well to end his mourning on the funeral pyre of his wife."

"You mean then, professor, I suppose," pursued the minx, "that, while it would be a necessity on the part of a widow to so end her mourning, a man under similar circumstances might do well to thus immolate himself."

I was in for it. The satire was delicate, but sufficiently biting to be understood by Miss Swann's classmates. Their faces were turned up to me, each wearing tantalizing smiles and all expecting my rejoinder. I resolved to silence the young lady by a compliment.

"I am quite sure, Miss Swann," I said, "that if you were a widow and proposed to end your earthly existence on your husband's funeral pyre a mob of bachelors would prevent it."

Amid another titter, this time not at my expense, I signified that the discussion was ended by proceeding with my dictation. Unfortunately there was a lot more in my lecture on what I called the emotion of love, and I feared that Miss Swann or some other member of the class would trip me up again. I would have omitted the rest were it not that I could not do so and preserve the continuity of my lecture. I was that long in striking a passage that brought about more trouble:

That the emotion is human instead of divine is indicated by the fact that a love which has existed for years may turn to hate. Again it may be lost, indeed, without another mental faculty, memory, it cannot continue even through life. There are many instances where the faculty of memory having been destroyed, persons have not even been cognizant of those they have loved. As the brain is a camera as well as a storehouse of photographic plates, so love—

I stopped. I realized that I might as well fire a canister of ideas antagonistic to woman's nature as finish the sentence.

"Go on!" cried every one in the room.

—in a countenance union of emotions produced by the perceptive faculties of an organic brain.

Smothered groans were mingled with the sound of scribbling. To escape from a situation which I considered appalling I closed the book from which I had been dictating and, rising, bowed a dismissal to the class. Half the girls had risen to hurl back my valedictory, the lecture being ended, they were unable to do so. A dozen came to my desk with defiance in their eyes; but, taking up my hat, I said with a smile:

"Pardon me, young ladies; I have an engagement at this hour, and to be on time I must go at once."

That was the last lecture delivered before that class. I knew that a storm of opposition to the views I had expressed would meet me on my next entry into the class room. Rather than subject myself to such a fire I resolved to resign my professorship. I did so and left by a midnight train, giving as a reason for my sudden action and departure that I had discovered on myself what I pronounced to be symptoms of hydrophobia and not for worlds would I communicate the disease to any one else. The University of B. never saw me again. Indeed, I never lectured again, devoting myself to original research. I learned afterward that had I not resigned voluntarily I would have been invited to do so, my lectures being considered by the corporation altogether too materialistic for a Christian college.

Ten years after the severance of my connection with B. university I was invited by my friend Joe Armour to make one of a house party at his country seat during the autumn. I accepted and found on arrival the company all present. My coming had been announced, and since Joe had been kind enough to speak a good word for me I was awaited with pleasant anticipations. On arrival I was introduced to to all the party, of course. Among the ladies a Miss Helen Phillips seemed most attractive to me, but I considered myself a confirmed bachelor, was devoted to the colonization of bacteria and had no idea of marriage. But Miss Phillips, instead of leaving me to show partiality for her or not, as I liked, took me in charge, so to speak, and it was not long before I noticed a disposition on the part of the other ladies of the party to consider me her especial cavalier.

For the first time in my life I fell under the thrall of a captivating woman. I had never experienced the sensation called love. All I knew about it was what I had expressed in a few passages in my lectures such as I have cited, and in my subsequent work I had forgotten all about them. The young women whose antagonism I had excited by my materialistic views had scattered, and many of them had become mothers. I had never heard of one of them since I left the university and had no desire to meet them. In thinking of them, which I seldom did, I usually called up the scene in which they had set upon me like so many fierce birds whose broods I had threatened. For one girl especially I had kept up a continued antagonism. That was Miss Swann, who had attempted to put me in a ridiculous light before the class. Had I been forty-seven instead of twenty-seven doubtless I should not have been so sensitive.

But this Miss Phillips—she never tired of listening to my theories, my accounts of experiments, my deductions. She was rather a listener than a talker. She gave no ideas of her own, asked no questions, paying the strictest attention to what I said, and when I announced a triumph in my work I received indications of her heartfelt sympathy. Then came a time when she began to lower her eyes at my approach, to show feeling when I paid her a compliment, to tremble a little if I were impatient with her.

Why multiply these symptoms of the tender passion? I soon began to feel as sure that love was growing up in the bosom of Miss Phillips as I was that I was in love with her. But, foolishly giving vent to my confidence, she swept away from me like a queen, leaving me terror stricken. A suppliant, one evening while sitting with her before a fire of blazing logs I told her of my love.

"What is love, professor?" she asked.

"Love," I said—"why, love is that sweet sympathy which exists between man and woman."

"Eternal?"

"I never thought so before, but now I do. I'm sure it is."

"Will you love me forever?"

"Forever."

"Enough to go with me when I go?"

"Where?"

She pointed to the heavens.

"The world would be a horror after you were gone."

"I believe in incineration."

"I'm not opposed to it, but what"—

"The man I marry must make me a promise."

"What promise?"

"To be incinerated with me when I die."

I stared at her in blank amazement.

"On that condition I will be yours."

Memory is a curious faculty. Scenes will lie dormant there for many years to be called out by a word or an incident pertaining to them. This incineration business called up that combat of words with one of my pupils ten years ago. For the first time I saw something familiar in Miss Phillips.

"You are"—I began, but stopped. I had forgotten the name I wanted.

"I am?" Her lips broke into a smile.

"The girl who quizzed me in the lecture room?"

"I am Kate Swann."

"And as full of the devil as ever."

"I vowed the day you lectured on love that if it were ever my good fortune to meet you I would make you eat your words. When I heard that you were expected here I knew my opportunity was at hand. I told the others that the certain reasons best known to myself I desired to be treated as you and guessed their intent to be addressed as Helen Phillips."

"Are they in the secret of your name?" I asked.

"No."

There was a silence between us. I was conscious of having been duped, and that is not a pleasant sensation.

"Well," I said at last coldly, "you have had a fiendish victory."

She looked up at me with an expression of a woman who desires to appease one she has offended, a combination, such as I had never seen.

"What is all for the purpose you have carried?" I added.

She placed hers to the fore, and I took her in my arms.

A Contradiction.

KING'S REUNION ❁ ANGLO-AMERICAN SOCIETY ❁ LONDON TOPICS

ROYALTY GATHERS AT SANDRINGHAM

King George and Queen Mary Have Family Reunion at Home There.

MAKE NEW BOOKPLATES

British Monarch Will Use Design Like That Commissioned for Queen Victoria.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

KING GEORGE and Queen Mary, after a brief stay in London, have gone to Sandringham, where they are having quite a family gathering. On her return from Denmark the Queen Mother, Alexandra, will resume her residence at the Mall, where she stopped a short time before going to Mar Lodge en route for Denmark. Queen Maud of Norway and Prince Olaf are expected early in November, King Haakon will follow later, and the royal circle will be completed by the presence of their majesties' younger members of their majesties' families, among them Princess Victoria and Prince Christopher of Greece, who seems likely to become a permanent addition to Queen Alexandra's home circle.

The health of Prince Leopold of Battenberg, which for some years has caused a good deal of anxiety to the royal family, is now better, but as the winter in England has generally been found too trying for him the doctors still advise him to winter abroad. He is, therefore, accompanying Sir Thomas Lipton aboard the Erin on his cruise in the South en route for Ceylon.

Among the minor matters which have been interesting King George lately has been the new design for his book plate. He has decided that no radically new design will be required. Queen Mary, on the other hand, in having an entirely fresh one prepared by Mr. W. T. Barrett. The King has made up his mind that his book plate shall follow, in the main, a design which was commissioned for the late Queen Victoria for use in the royal library at Windsor. It shows the lion and the crown surmounted by the letters "G. R.," instead of "V. R. I." Prince Edward is likely to adopt the fine but simple heraldic design used by his father as Prince of Wales, showing the lion and the unicorn and Prince of Wales' feathers.

The fact that the Queen Mother, Alexandra, has continued the appointment of Mistress of the Robes in her household, which the Duchess of Buccleugh still holds, means that there will be two Mistresses of the Robes holding office simultaneously, a state of affairs which is without precedent at the British Court for several generations past. The Queen Mother is not expected much in London this winter, but as soon as the Court mourning is over and Her Majesty is settled at Marlborough House the household of the Queen Mother will be maintained with proper state, and it is now believed in court circles that Her Majesty will take an active a part in social life as she has done for the last ten years.

MORGAN PURCHASE AROUSES SPAIN

(Special Dispatch.)
Madrid, Saturday.—The Correspondencia de España says that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has bought the house known as the Casa de Miranda, at Burgos, for the purpose of taking away the patio and staircase, great artistic works of the Renaissance period. It is stated that the Inspector General of National Monuments, Señor Cristino Marios, has interfered and is communicating with the Governor of Burgos to prevent their exportation. The Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts is considering whether the Casa de Miranda is a national monument or not.

HARRIST'S PURCHASE GENUINE MURILLO

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A valuable picture, believed to be a genuine Murillo and estimated to be worth at least £4,000, has just come into the possession of Father Jeanrenaud, a Roman Catholic priest located in Liverpool.

A remarkable history attaches to the picture, which is a painting of a Madonna. For eighty years it was the property of a Liverpool art and curio dealer until he died, when his son sold it to a friend, who, curiously enough, was an Orangeman. When the religious riots were at their height the Orangeman became frightened and decided it would be well to get rid of it, which he did.

Father Jeanrenaud, rector of the Roman Catholic Oratory at St. Philip Neri, heard that this picture was again for sale, went to see it and, impressed with its beauty, which was apparent in spite of its great age, made an offer and became the owner at a comparatively small sum. The canvas was found to an old wooden frame and was much soiled, but on day after examining the picture Father Jeanrenaud discovered the initials "B. E." cut on the back of the frame. Thinking that the picture might possess more value than was made for it, the priest invited an expert to see it. He, after examining the picture, declared it to be a genuine Murillo, and Father Jeanrenaud came to Liverpool and informed the friends on the [illegible] head of Berkeley Street

Pitt's House, Where 'Great Commoner' Lived in Mental Gloom During Birth of American Nation, Is for Sale

HOUSE IN WHICH GREAT BRITAIN LOST AMERICA: NORTH-END PLACE, HAMPSTEAD HEATH

Apartments Occupied by Earl of Chatham Remain as They Then Were.

MORAY LODGE TO GO UNDER HAMMER, TOO

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

TWO historic mansions on the outskirts of London, one of especial interest to America, are about to come under the auctioneer's hammer. One is Pitt House, or Wildwoods, as it was originally called, a house that had its part in one of the most epoch making events in the world's history.

It was to this mansion, on Hampstead Heath, then the property of Lord North, that William Pitt, "the Great Commoner," retired in August, 1766, within a few days of his double elevation to the Premiership and to the Earldom of Chatham, remaining there, a physical and mental wreck, in complete seclusion from both King and Ministers, for many months at one of the most critical periods of English history, when the clash with the American colonies reached its acute phase. Had the great statesman been able to be at his post during the memorable year of 1767 it is not unlikely that historians dealing with events in the American continent a century and a half ago would have a vastly different tale to tell.

The property, which will be offered for sale by Messrs. Lowe & Goldschmidt early in November, has been altered a good deal since then, internally perhaps more than externally, but all that appertained to the Chatham incident has been kept religiously intact.

Pitt's apartments remain as they were, the most curious being an inner chamber on the top floor, the door of which is still fastened by the padlock that Pitt used. When the aged Earl required anything it was placed in a recess outside this door, and in answer to a knock he unlocked the door, took what he wanted from the recess, and forthwith locked himself in again. The floors of his private rooms are still preserved as they were, showing the ruts made by the wheels of his invalid chair. The oak cupboard in which he kept his state papers is also preserved.

Moray Lodge, another of the very few remaining "country houses" of London, is the other mansion to be sold shortly. It is very old. Once surrounded by fields, it is now within five minutes' walk of the High street underground station at Kensington. But it still has its beautiful garden and lawns, shrubberies and rosary. Originally in the possession of the Moray family, it passed early in the eighteenth century into the hands of Mr. Arthur Lewis and became one of the most fashionable houses in London and a favorite resort of society on Sunday afternoons. Lately it has been in the possession of Mr. David Pullinger, a South African magnate, who now wants to sell it.

LONDON HOSTESSES READY FOR SEASON

Many American Women Are Among Them, Including Lady Dufferin and Lady Bateman.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

AMONG the few Anglo-Americans to be seen about in London just now is Lady Dufferin, looking as charming as ever.

Lady Bateman, another American hostess who is expected to have some parties during the winter, has returned to London and will very soon be settling down in Lady Miller's house in Grosvenor square.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Guinness are moving very shortly into their new house in Grosvenor Place, the spacious mansion formerly owned by Mr. Arthur Wilson, whose widow is soon to take up her residence in Charles street with her daughter, Miss Muriel Wilson.

Mrs. Henry Coventry is another American hostess who will dispense hospitality this winter in Grosvenor square. Her newly acquired residence there has been in the hands of the builders for nearly a year, and it is believed that the alterations are now approaching completion.

Mrs. George Keppel has left with the Earl and Countess of Ilchester for Italy, and later on she goes to Burmah, China and Japan, after which she intends to spend six or eight weeks in Ceylon with her children and Baroness Daisy de Brienen. Mrs. Graham Murray will be of the party for at least part of the time, and Sir Archibald and Lady Edmonstone will meet them in China during the winter.

Mrs. Philip Lydig, after a long stay in Europe, has now practically decided to return to America during the first week of November. She will go to Boston for some time to help in the arrangements for the wedding of her younger sister, Miss Angela de Acosta, whose engagement to Mr. William Sewell was announced this summer.

Whether it be that the steamships have been carrying so many Americans home lately, it is remarked how few pretty women are to be seen about town just now, in the West End, or indeed women of any sort. But if there be few women, there is certainly no dearth of men.

DUSTLESS ROAD AT LAST.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

It looks as if a cure for dusty roads has been found at last, thanks to several years' painstaking experimenting by Mr. Francis Wood, borough engineer at Fulham. The material is a mixture of two-inch granite with Trinidad Lake bitumen.

Mr. Wood laid a portion of a road in Fulham with this combination, and although it has been traversed by about two thousand vehicles daily, including automobiles, ever since, and [illegible] ago, it is almost free of dust on the surface, and on the hottest days there is no sign of the road softening down.

CENTENARIANS' RECIPES FOR REACHING GREAT AGE

Little Tobacco, Not Too Much Liquor, Says Man of 100 Years; He of 102 Eschewed Fragrant Weed, but Older One Demands Both.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

TWO centenarians who have just celebrated their 100th and 102d birthday, respectively, have been telling what they consider the secrets of longevity. Another centenarian, a well known huntsman, who died on the same day at the age of 101, also had his views on how to preserve life.

The first of the trio is Mr Henry Tomlinson, a well known sportsman of Cheshire. On reaching his hundredth birthday he was gladdened by a message from King George, accepting his photograph. The Duke of Westminster and the Marquis of Cholmondeley also sent him congratulations. He has pleasant recollections of nearly eighty years' hunting, and attributes his great age to having led a healthy outdoor life, using little tobacco and not too much liquor.

Mr. William Head celebrated his 103d birthday in Windsor Workhouse, where he has been since he gave up his work as a laborer at the age of ninety-six. But he still rejoices in good health. "Fresh air, moderation, hard work and the simple life" are his recipes for prolonged days. He smokes shag tobacco and drinks his regulation pint of beer every day with relish. His only regret is that he has not an allowance of an ounce of tobacco daily instead of weekly.

Colonel John Bower, of Droxford, Hants, who was 102 before he died, was the oldest British officer on the retired list. He was a non-smoker, but not a teetotaler. Up to the last he enjoyed a half pint of champagne with his meals. Asked recently his recipe for old age he said:—"Sport and the open air and a healthy, contented mind—the mind that tells you what is best for you and helps you to get it. That's all."

Hints to Wearer of Hobble Skirt

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

DISTINCTLY branded as an "American monstrosity," the "hobble" skirt continues to be a special target for critics of feminine fashion. The following hints as to how wearers of "this latest tyranny" should act in emergencies are given by the Windsor Magazine:—

How to Enter a Taxicab.—This is impossible without the chauffeur's assistance. Ask him to dismount and stand behind you as you face the open door. He must then seize you firmly by each elbow and raise you not less than six inches from the ground. Holding the body rigid, you can then find a footing on the step and will be able to fall forward onto the seat quite comfortably.

How to Hurry in Subways.—The various methods employed by the modish to accelerate their speed in subways have met with indifferent success. It is advisable to take your time on the level, but as soon as you come to a downward slope assume a horizontal position and roll.

How to Escape in Case of Fire.—In order to be prepared for such an emergency it will be well to practise walking on the hands in spare moments. For by this means quite a good pace can be accomplished.

How to Descend from a Motorbus.—Request the conductor not to touch you. His well meant clutch may upset your delicate balance. Place both feet together and, clasping the rails and swinging the arms, take a standing jump for the curb, avoiding the gutter if possible.

How to Run from a Mad Dog.—Run, without delay, a pair of scissors, a pincushion, or any other convenient article, and on the dog [illegible] the last [illegible] them to knee, thus temporarily reverting to the Directoire style.

SHOCKED BY BIG SHOES.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

The Duke of Connaught will find Cape Town Society somewhat different from that described in the letters of Lady Ann Barnard, whose husband was secretary to the Governor of Cape Colony in 1797. Describing her first ball at Government House, Lady Ann states that "the Dutch ladies danced without halting at all, a sort of pit-a-pat little step which they have probably learned from some beauty on her way to Bengal. What they lack most are shoulders and manners. But the most exceptional things about them are their feet and the size of their feet. A tradesman in London, hearing their feet were so large, sent a box of shoes on speculation, which almost put the colony in a blaze, so angry were the beauties. But day by day a pair was sent for by a slave in the dark until at last all the shoes had vanished."

BOY SCOUTS TO BE SEEN IN NEW DRAMA

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Having trudged their way all over England and awakened the British Islands with their drum corps at all hours of the day and night, the Boy Scouts now are to be exhibited. The play dealing with the movement is entitled "A Good Turn." Its author, Mr. Clifford L. Bennett, at one time an actor, is a "Scout master."

SILKS SOCKS CALLED FOE OF MATRIMONY

Irish Clergyman Says Young Men Nowadays Prefer Gaudy Garb to Fireside Joys.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THAT the desire of young men to decorate themselves in sartorial finery is the prime cause why many fail to place their necks under the yoke of matrimony is the assertion of the Rev. Samuel Hemphill, a distinguished Irish clergyman.

"It seems that the young men of today," said Dr. Hemphill, "prefer patent leather shoes and spats and a fortnight's 'swelling' about a watering place, or a game of billiards at a club every night, to the delights of family life. Their wages, in most cases, will not permit both the sartorial adornment and some sort of a club and a wife, so they go in for flashy clothes and let a lot of sweet girls pine out their lives in maidenhood. Better the love of a sweet wife than all the silk socks and gaudy waistcoats in the world."

JAPAN FEARS LOSS OF WESTERN ALLY

Turns Eyes on Germany to Replace England If Latter Declines to Continue Treaty.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)
PARIS, September 25, 1910.

That recent developments of international politics presage the end of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is the conviction of most Englishmen resident in the Far East. They may take a roseate view of the situation, since it is unquestionably true that with them the thought in the mind is largely shaped by the wish in the heart. But the thought is not theirs alone. It is held by practically all diplomats and students of international politics capable of understanding the mighty influence exercised upon governmental action by the undercurrents of public opinion.

Japan's new pact with Russia, which such a high Japanese authority as Dr. Arign says is tantamount to an alliance, and Japan's roughshod absorption of Corea are two accomplished facts that have injected themselves as levers to disturb the bases upon which this alliance was built. A third important factor moving to the same end is the manifest determination of Japanese statesmanship so to shape tariff revision as to make it bear with peculiar heaviness against those imports from Great Britain that have constituted the bulk of British trade with Japan.

British Exporters Hard Hit.

This touches the British pocket. When Count Komura, Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, declared that since Great Britain is pursuing a free trade policy "there is no room for a continental tariff that country," he served notice that all those trade benefits they have regarded as their right under the alliance are doomed. The result has been a great protest from English Chambers of Commerce, English commerce experts and leading English newspapers, all of it indicating a decided awakening on the part of the British public to the true portent of the Japanese advance. This awakening is bound to be a mighty influence in shaping British thought.

This tariff agitation has served to throw the limelight upon the whole Korean annexation question. And this, in turn, has engendered in the British mind the suspicion that the Russo-Japan entente may not, after all, be the innocent and inocuous affair it was first pronounced. Even the London Times, which at first waxed enthusiastic over this pact, has cooled down, pronounces the agreement vague and unsatisfactory, and urges the two Powers to be more explicit. This can only mean that the Times, the organ of the British Foreign Office, has been forced to the belief that there is much more of "agreement" between Japan and Russia than appears in the wording and the official explanation of the new treaty.

Secret Treaty May Exist.

There seems to be no warrant for doubting that in some written form—whether an exchange of notes or a separate convention—there is in existence an agreement between Japan and Russia that gives a more definite and a far more extended meaning to it all than is embodied in the published pledge "to preserve the status quo."

The conviction that this is true is strongly voiced by all the leading British newspapers published in Japan and China. These declare that the "status quo" which Japan and Russia have joined forces to preserve is not that created by the Portsmouth and other treaties, but is an entirely new "status quo," of whose scope and meaning the British Foreign Office, as well as the rest of the world, has been [illegible]

RAPS AMERICAN RHODES SCHOLARS

London Daily Mail Says Students from This Country Are "Exclusive" and "Abuse" Founder's Gift.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

NOW it is the American holders of Rhodes scholarships at the University of Oxford who have come in for a series of whacks from the slapstick of British criticism. It is charged that the American Rhodes scholars are too exclusive, that they refuse to fraternise with their English classmates and that thus the bequest of the late Cecil Rhodes is being "abused." Pointing out that the founder's idea was that the 170 scholarships would tend to bring about an understanding between England, Germany and the United States that would tend to "secure the peace of the world," and that men were to be chosen not only for their scholastic attainments, but also for "qualities of manhood, truth, courage, devotion to duty, kindliness, unselfishness and fellowship," the Daily Mail says:—

"It is a thousand pities that under existing conditions the spirit of the bequest is not complied with. Against the Colonials and Germans there is nothing to be said; they do associate with the rest of the undergraduates, and are with and of them. As regards the American, however, it is different. He takes from Oxford everything that she has to give and withholds from her anything that may be in his power to return. Is it possible that there are no men in America possessed of the various 'qualities of manhood' quoted above or, on having succeeded in obtaining the scholarship, does all idea of carrying out their obligations go by the board?

"The American Rhodes scholar becomes an undergraduate of Oxford only so far as the wearing of a cap and gown and the obtaining of athletic honors permit. For the rest, he keeps to himself and seeks to know nothing of his English surroundings and fellow undergraduates, nor to impart any of the ideas of his own country for their discussion, approval or disapproval."

BOTTLES HELD WATER, THIS EXCUSE DIDN'T

Captain, Accused of Overloading Ship, Said Sea Filled Receptacles on Deck and Trebled Their Weight.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

One of the most peculiar defences ever recorded in the history of the British Board of Trade was that set up in the recent case of the prosecution of John Rudolf Berndtsson, master of the Swedish steamship Faunus, for entering the port of London with his vessel in an overloaded condition. It was shown by the government officials that the Faunus entered the East India Docks after a voyage from Gothenburg, with her load line one and three-quarter inches below the water level, which indicated to the government's experts that she had left port with some ninety tons more cargo than a British vessel can legally carry. It was held by these experts that when she left Gothenburg the ship must have been eight and one-half inches lower in the water than she should have been.

Captain Berndtsson contended, when he outlined his defence, that part of the cargo consisted of 70,000 glass bottles in crates, which were carried on deck. During the voyage heavy weather was encountered, and the seas, breaking on board, filled the bottles with water, with the result that they more than trebled their original weight and caused the vessel's loadline to drop accordingly.

"That's the most ingenious excuse I ever heard," ruled the Grimsby magistrate who sat in judgment, "but, unlike the bottles, it won't hold water," and a heavy fine was forthwith imposed.

MEDALLIONS NOW BY CAMERA'S AID

Italian Scientist Describes Method for Obtaining Actual Photographs in Bas Relief.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE artist who designs medals may find his occupation gone if the invention of Professor Carlo Baese, of Florence, as revealed in a demonstration before the Royal Photographic Society in London catches on.

With the aid of a camera Professor Baese can produce your actual likeness upon precious metals, plaster or any other plastic body, on a medal or coin if you like, and at a trifling cost compared with the $100 or $1,000 you would have to pay an engraver.

To begin with, you sit as for your photograph. Behind you in a powerful lamp, connected with the camera, on either side of which is a mirror to reflect a clear light upon your face in order that details may be obtained and in order to prevent deep, false shadows. Within four seconds two negatives are obtained upon the same plate. One of these is turned into a positive and is fitted exactly over the negative. Then, by means of the professor's patent, the lights and shades cause varying depths to be formed, thus giving a film in relief, and from this the gelatine mould is obtained, which in turn gives way to a cast of permanent material, and from this any number of metal or plaster photos in bas relief can be cast.

The invention, of course, also opens the door to an infinite variety of plaster decorations for all purposes.

UGLY BUT SPEEDY IS NIW WAR SHIP

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

The new British battle ship-cruiser Indefatigable, which will proceed from Devonport for her speed trials in the Channel after taking board 2,000 tons of coal and 500 tons of oil probably will be distinguished as the "ugliest war ship afloat." Engineers at the evonport dockyard expect that she will show a speed of two or three knots more than the twenty-six knots which the vessel must develop, her turbines being ostensibly designed to develop 44,000 horse power.

One factor marring the symmetry of the Indefatigable is that her funnels, three in number, are all of different depth, and are set at unequal distances apart. The forward funnel is twenty feet high than the other two, the purpose of this being to carry the fumes clear of the fire control station on the fore tripod. Her hull also embodies some striking departure of design. From her stem to about 10-8th her length aft, the war ship is built like a wedge. No racing yacht has such knifelike lines. In sailor parlance, she "has no shoulders at all."

The Indefatigable will be driven through the waves, not over them. Her immense freeboard forward renders this possible. Where a smaller vessel might be engaged this battle ship-cruiser, her designers intend, will merely throw a smother of spray. The idea of minimising her lifting power is that she may not lose speed by plunging in heavy weather, and thus give greater steadiness at the gun platforms. Enormous bilge keels are intended to reduce rolling.

Eight twelve-inch guns are mounted in four turrets, the wing pair being echeloned so that all guns can be brought to bear on either broadside and six ahead or astern.

GHOST'S CHAMBER FOUND IN INN

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Most Americans touring England know the old house in Newbury which is now used as a sort of old curiosity shop for the exhibition and sale of antique English furniture. They know it also as a place which was once an inn in the coaching days, where, tradition has it, Dick Turpin, the notorious highwayman, took refuge when hotly pursued by Bow street runners.

There has also been a tradition that there was a secret chamber in the house where Dick hid himself, and where other knights of the road were wont to seek refuge, but that it had been built up after a murder had been committed there, on account of the ghost which stalked into the room periodically. The room was considered a myth, for no one could locate any part of the house where it possibly could be. Now it has been discovered. The house has been undergoing some alterations, during which a brick partition was encountered. Breaking through that was found the secret chamber which has been closed for at least a hundred and fifty years. Ghost or no ghost, it is not to be bricked up again.

CALLS "APPENDICITIS" EXCUSE TO OPERATE

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

That "appendicitis" is a convenient diagnosis which affords surgeons an excuse to operate on patients and that so-called "successful operations" and fatalities far more often than generally is supposed are charged made by a writer in the Specialist Review who signs himself "M. A. M. D., M. C."

"The term appendicitis' is a veritable gift from the gods to the medical profession," says this medical critic. "Any pain in the abdomen that is not easily explained otherwise is explicable at once by 'appendicitis.' One need only recall the frequent announcement in the newspapers that 'on Monday a successful operation was performed on Mr. A. B. for appendicitis and the distinguished patient is doing well.' On Wednesday appears a notice of the patient' death. It is within the writer's knowledge that a surgeon had nine consecutive cases of death after operation for 'appendicitis.' If a surgeon in the particular case has carried [illegible] even endangered his life and [illegible] Goodness [illegible] a slip, and [illegible] same [illegible]

Why the Oven is such an Excellent Baker

WOULD you like to know the reasons for the wonderful baking powers of the Pandora oven?

One reason why the Pandora oven excels as a baker is because the Fire-Box is amply large enough to provide all the heat the oven requires. Another is because the Sheet Steel Walls of the oven are uniform in thickness. This, together with the Special Flue Construction which carries the heat around the oven twice, assures absolutely uniform distribution of heat in the oven. Still another is because the main bottom of range is protected with a heavy coating of Fire Clay which prevents cold drafts, passing underneath the range, from cooling the oven.

Look at a batch of bread baked in the Pandora oven. The crust on each and every loaf is exactly alike. The Pandora oven is the sure-working, uniform oven that you've long desired. And it's in a range that's guaranteed to satisfy you in every particular.

Go and see the Pandora at our agent's in your locality.

IN NEW MILLINERY.

Black Satin Hats Are Very Popular, but Commonplace.

TWO OF THE NEW HATS.

Everywhere one goes the inverted flowerpot hat of black satin is sure to be seen. This piece of millinery in artistic hands is wonderfully chic, but when attempted by the great majority it is a cheap imitation of a good mode. A two inch ruffle of white lace peeps from the brim, and the trimming is usually a large, flat bow at the side. What hats have lost this season in circumference they have gained in height, and some of the models are prodigiously tall, but as they are the advance guard of millinery there is every reason to hope that as the season advances they will be modified.

The new hats, though, are very trying to the average woman, for they either sit down over the head, concealing most of her hair, or they flare up abruptly and unbecomingly from her face.

To be sure, there is a certain smartness about them, especially the coronet shapes that have a rather narrow upstanding brim in front and gradually rise to stupendous heights in the back. A wreath of feathers resembling an Indian chief's war bonnet is the sole trimming.

The all feather toque, although not new, is very smart, and there is one advantage in this model—it cannot be carried out in cheap feathers. Beaver shapes in all colors promise to be popular, and ostrich feathers arranged in high, upstanding groups of three or more add an extra degree of altitude to many smart shapes. It is to be a great season for velvet, both for hat coverings and for trimmings. And in feathers there is a new effect called the Belgium plume, composed of owl feathers, that is as weird as it is expensive. Fur, too, will be very much used on hats.

A Wise Conclusion.

Home's the nicest, after all!
Once I went a long, long way—
Took a car and traveled far,
On the train a night and day,
Many funny things I saw—
Rivers, cities, mountains tall—
But I begged for leaving time,
"Home's the nicest, after all!"

Once the shepherd dog and I
Thought we'd journey through the wood—
Took enough of bread and stuff—
Played that I was Robin Hood.
Oh, how very lost we got!
How I had to cry and call!
Tell you home looked mighty good.
It's the safest, after all.

Sometimes when I read the tale
Of a great man's wanderings,
When I see swift bird or bee
And begin to wish for wings,
Long to have a big balloon,
Fret because I stay so small,
I remember certain things—
Home's the best place, after all!

Good Form

To be socially correct all note paper must be stamped at the top either with address and monogram or only with one. In these days of frequent change of residence a woman does not always have an address die; yet, though it is an expense, it is a finish to her stationery which is most desirable and therefore to be tried for. If only one thing is to be put on paper the address is preferred to the monogram on the theory that the former must be made to order, while the latter may be had ready made. For the street and number plain block letters are the best, and unless one lives in a large city whose street names are so well known as immediately to be identified with the place the name of the town must also be stamped.

In the placing of this adornment fashion has recently made a change, and one is more apt on the new stationery to see it between the middle and the left corner than directly in the middle, as was recently the case. When the monogram is used with it the latter is put in the left corner, the address going in the right.

When the name of the town is added to the street the former is now indented. Quite lately the town name went directly under the street, "centered," bringing it in the middle of the line above. Now it has the same relation to the top line that the address has on an envelope, and this placing marks all the new dies.

If only a monogram alone or one initial is to be stamped it goes in the upper left corner, and the die may be as fancy as one chooses.

The Girl Who is Easy.

A girl who looks on while her friend who is known as "easy" is apparently having a glorious time wonders whether good breeding is not old fashioned. But it is not the girl who cares little how she talks, where she goes unchaperoned or how free and easy she permits her man friends to be who wins out in the end.

How often does the quiet little mouse of a girl, whom the other girls call a prude or stick, take the catch of the season and get invitations that her easier friends want.

It is hard in this age to have too high a standard of self respect. Permitted liberties are so much greater than a generation ago that one needs watchfulness not to overstep the line into liberty.

A girl need not be a prude because she does not believe in familiarities of speech or touch. When once she has made her position and standards clear she can have just as good a time and far more respect than her friend who is "easy."

Because a girl is particular it does not follow she must be slow. Given a sense of fun, readiness to be amused by everything that comes along and a tongue that doesn't backbite, and a nice girl need never lack attention because she does not believe in always sitting in corners and frowns upon dubious jokes.

College Etiquette.

A college girl must, of course, first of all develop her mind as far as possible, but this does not mean that she must or may forget the rules of etiquette laid down for all well bred girls, whether at home, at college, in business or in the social world.

She must talk in low tones. She must be courteous to all around her, respectful to those who are older and considerate of those who are beneath her socially. She must learn to converse in an interesting manner without asserting her own opinions or trying in any way to show a superior knowledge, even upon subjects which she has made her special study.

She must learn to act the part of the graceful, courteous and interesting hostess and also the charming and well read guest. At all times she must be the well bred, dignified, courteous as well as interesting and clever college girl.

In the social world there is a tacit understanding that we shall all be agreeable to one another, always putting the attractive things of life on the outside and keeping our private woes to ourselves.

This is a rule that none can afford to overlook—old or young, society girl, college girl or business girl.

Table Etiquette.

The little difference between lifting a dish and shoving it along makes the big difference between a sloven and the punctilious observer of good manners at the table and has an effect in marring the harmony of the table, whereby in congeniality and table enjoyment all are best conserved.

Sucking the fingers or teeth, picking the teeth at the table before all are done eating, gazing about the table while drinking, tipping back the chair on two legs, taking any of the dessert, as fruit, nuts or sweetmeats, away from the table, is the worst possible form.

A Man's Arm.

Nowadays it is not the custom for a woman to lean upon the arm of the man who is walking beside her during the daytime, and she seldom accepts this support after nightfall unless she is infirm or elderly or the man is her fiance or husband.

present from Paris, Naples, Belgium and Valencia. Miss Kitty Darling, whose picture is here shown, was the successful beauty winner. Miss Darling is only seventeen years of age. She is fair, dresses simply and wears her hair in long plaits on either side of her head. She has posed as an artists' model. If America had sent a representative Miss Kitty very likely would have been out of the running.

An Embarrassing Habit.

Hiccoughs are distinctly mortifying to the victim. As they are signs of poor digestion and may mean bad stomach trouble, if of frequent occurence, they should be treated medicinally.

For temporary cures try gradually dissolving a small lump of sugar on the tongue. Slow sipping of hot water is also good or gargling the throat with ice water.

Bread and Button.

Select a small article, as a thimble that can be easily hidden. All players except one close their eyes and hide their faces in their hands. The person holding the article then hides it in some convenient spot in the room. After it is secreted he calls, "Bread and butter, please, my lady, come to supper." At this all eyes are opened and the search begins. A clew is given by announcing that the supper is warm, cold or hot, according to the proximity of the searcher to the spot where the article is hidden. Once found, the person who has been successful in the search is allowed to hide it again, and so the game continues.

Character Game.

One of the company leaves the room. A name which contains as many letters as there are persons in the room is chosen, and to each one a letter of the name is assigned. Each person is then expected to choose a character whose name begins with that letter. The players all sit in a semicircle in the order of the letters, of course.

The one outside is called in and told where the name begins and ends. He may be allowed either a certain time or a certain number of questions to find out each letter and in this manner spell out the name.

GOLD MINES OF IRELAND.

County Wicklow Had a Rush In 1795 But Government Took It.

Ireland is certainly not the "poor distressful country" some people would like one to believe. The fact that it possesses gold mines (although they are not worked to-day) is proof to the contrary. The mines are situated in Wicklow. According to tradition, the Wicklow gold mines were first discovered by a poor schoolmaster. One day, while fishing in one of the streams which descend from the Croghan Mountains, he picked up a piece of shining metal. Ascertaining that it was gold, he gradually enriched himself by searching the various streams in the neighborhood and disposing of what he found to a Dublin goldsmith. He kept the secret to himself for twenty years, but having married, he told his wife, and she, believing that he was mad, told her relatives, who soon made it public O'Keefe has founded an amusing farce upon the incident.

When the story of the gold mine became public, about the close of 1795, the usual "rush" occurred. Thousands of every age and sex hurried to the spot. From the laborer who could wield a spade to the child who scraped the surface of the rock with a rusty nail, all eagerly searched for gold. The rich and fanciful imagination of the Irish conjured up visions of inexhaustible wealth. On the north side of Wicklow County sparkled the Valley of Diamonds, and on the south the lofty Croghan was to them as the Golden Mountain.

De Latocnaye, a French emigrant, who published an account of his travels in Ireland, visited the Wicklow gold mines shortly after the Government had placed a guard upon the ground. He writes: "I was often obliged to ask the way, and my demands excited the curiosity of the peasants; they quitted their work before they answered me, asked me some question in their turn, wanted to know if the mine would be soon worked, if the Government had sent me there, and a thousand things of the same nature. They soon began to tell me of a person who sent his children there on a Sunday morning, after it had rained, and that they brought back gold to the value of twenty guineas."

During the interval between the publication of the circumstance and the Government taking possession of the mine—a period of two months—upwards of 2,500 ounces of gold was collected by the peasantry, chiefly from the mud and sand of Ballinvalley stream, and disposed of for almost $50,000. This sum greatly exceeded the produce of the mine under Government operations, which only amounted to little more than $17,500. The gold was found in pieces of all sizes, from the smallest particle to a mass of twenty-two ounces, which sold for about eighty guineas. A cast of it, gilt, was deposited in the museum of Trinity College, Dublin. So pure was the gold generally found that it was the custom of the Dublin goldsmiths to put gold coin into the opposite scale to it, and to give weight for weight.

MINIATURE GARDENS.

Tiny Lakes, Trees and Houses In Diminutive Japanese Parks.

The Japanese have the art of dwarfing trees to mere shrubs and of cultivating plants in a similar way. The people take great delight in their miniature gardens, which require a special gardener to keep them down to desired limits. A Japanese garden is generally about ten yards square, and in this small space is found a park and demesne, with lake, summer houses, temples, trees, all complete and in keeping with the dimensions available.

One such garden shows a lake four feet long and full of goldfish. On the border stands a pine tree exactly eighteen inches high and fifty years old. Beneath its shade is a temple carved out of one piece of stone the size of a brick. On a lofty crag of some two and a half feet stands a fine maple tree, perfect in form and shape, fifteen years old and twelve inches high.

One household in Japan boasts of a complete garden contained in a shallow two dozen wine case. Everything is complete down to the fish in the lake, a sheet of water only a few inch square, and the footbridges over the water courses. Tea houses there are and numerous trees of various kinds, each about six inches in height. Old as the hills are these diminutive trees, but full of vitality, and yet never growing bigger.—New York Press.

"Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are the best I ever tried for the relief of headache. I have used them for nearly four years and they never fail to give me relief. I have tried many other remedies, but have never found any better."

One Consolation.

During the time he acted as United States consul in Glasgow Bret Harte occasionally indulged in a day's sport with the gun, and it was during one of his shooting excursions that the humorist met with an accident which might have disfigured him for the remainder of his life, his face being badly cut through the recoil of an overloaded gun. Fortunately the doctor's skill prevented him from being permanently marked.

Writing about the occurrence to his friend, T. Edgar Pemberton, who quotes the letter in his "Tribute to Bret Harte," the novelist concludes his letter by telling of an amusing effort which was made to console him on account of the accident.

"When the surgeon was stitching me together," he wrote, "the son of the house, a boy of twelve, came timidly to the door of my room.

"'Tell Mr. Bret Harte it's all right,' he said. 'He killed the hare.'"

Artificial Flowers.

It was in Italy that a demand for artificial flowers first arose. This was due primarily to a caprice of fashion which demanded that during festivals blossoms in and out of their seasons should be worn and also to the fact that their color and freshness were stable. Later on, in the middle ages, the artificial so far superseded the natural that both men and women decked their heads with imitation flowers of cambric, paper, glass and metal.

Spiteful.

At a local picture show a painter hung a notice under his highly prized landscape, "Do not touch with canes or umbrellas." Some one who was not an admirer of his works added to the notice, "Take an ax!"

Disagreeable Economy.

Husband—You are not economical. Wife—Well, if you don't call a woman economical who saves her wedding dress for a possible second marriage I'd like to know what you think economy is like.

Each In His Own Field.

Papa—See that spider, my boy, spinning his web. Is it not wonderful! Do you reflect that, try as he may, no man could spin that web?

Johnny—What of it? See me spin this top! Do you reflect, try as he may, no spider could spin this top?

She Had Reason.

"Johnny, what is the meaning oongth to be conveyed in the assertion, 'Freedom shrieked when Kosciusko fell?'"

"Freedom was prob'ly what he fell on, ma'am."—Houston Post.

CONVICT A POET?

William Huckle Claims to Have Written Hymn In Anglican Hymnal.

William Huckle, now serving a seven-year sentence in Kingston Penitentiary for alleged blackmail while engaged in the private detective business in Hamilton, has written the Anglican Archbishop of Ottawa, claiming authorship of hymn 676, "Just for To-Day," in the book of common praise. He says:

"In July, 1878, I was addressing an open-air meeting in Hyde Park, England, my subject being 'Infidelity versus Christianity.' During my remarks I referred to the love of God as exemplified in the provision He had made for man's sustenance. An infidel in the audience interrupted me, asking why we prayed to God for 'daily bread; why not ask for a year's supply.' In reply I told a story of a little girl, who upon being asked the same question replied, 'Because we do not want stale bread, we want fresh bread each day.' Upon reaching my home and thinking about the incident, I composed a leaflet entitled 'Just for To-Day,' which I recited the following Sunday at an open-air meeting in Hyde Park. A gentleman named Counsel, an Australian, who was present, asked me after the meeting if I would have the verses printed, offering to have 20,000 printed if I would agree with him to do so. A printer named Frederick Crawley printed them, and my name was attached. Another 20,000 were printed in 1883, 10,000 were printed in Passaic in 1887 and in 1888 10,000 were printed in Toronto. Each time my name was attached.

"It has also been published in several religious papers, I understand.

"The hymn 676 in 'The Book of Common Praise' is my leaflet, 'Just for To-Day.' The last two verses have been altered. In the original they were rendered as follows:

"Cleanse and receive my parting soul,
Be Thou my stay;
Bid me, if to-day I die
Go home to-day.

"So for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray—
But keep me, guide me; hold me, Lord
Just for to-day."

"My wife has copies of the original, also of others which I have composed—which you may obtain from her, her address being 1,200 North Goodman street, Rochester, U.S.A.

"I would esteem it a favor if you will enquire into the facts as given above, and communicate with me as to the result. My object in writing to you is that credit may be given where it is due, and I am confident you will feel that if my verses are considered worthy of a place in the 'Book of Common Praise,' the authorship should at least be acknowledged. Mr. Dawson, the inspector, has seen one of the original copies of 'Just for To-Day,' published in 1878 with my name attached."

The letter was forwarded to J. Edmund Jones, Toronto, who acted as secretary of the compilation committee of the hymnal, who will make an enquiry. Although the composition appears as anonymous in the new Anglican hymn book, it has often been attributed to the Right Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, a bishop in the Church of England, who is dead some time.

Huckle may be hoping that his claims to authorship may assist in shortening his prison term, as was the case of a young English poet in St. Paul, Minn., penitentiary recently.

Mr. Butler Talks On St. John.

Mr. M. J. Butler, Dominion Iron & Steel Co., made some important remarks at the Canadian Club in St. John the other night. Mr. Butler thinks that city ought to be the model port of America. He says Montreal is to be Canada's summer port and St. John the haven of the winter mariner. He commented on the facilities of St. John—in the front row with the best of any town in the Dominion to-day. Courtenay Bay on the east of the harbor gave the ex-railroader an idea. Why does not enterprise get a spade and dredge the bay and knock a few more wharves into shape? Another point of Mr. Butler's:

"With proper freight handling mechanism between the wharves and steamers, your port, figuratively speaking, would be on an average of about 250 or 300 miles inland." He fished out a map during his lecture to the club, and traced the future of St. John. He reminded the diners that they would be sure of roping in the transcontinental roads—St. John would be a big terminal point in five years. He also referred to the Hudson Bay dream fast approaching reality. Mr. Butler set out to prove that if Hudson Bay and Straits are navigable, the Maritime Provinces will find it much easier to ship their stuff up to Port Nelson, across the Bay to the West. And where does St. John come in if this is so? Mr. Butler's answer: "St. John is the natural port of the Maritime Provinces."

Portugal and Canada.

Portugal's population is given at 5,423,132, slightly less than Canada's; but crowded into an area of 36,400 square miles, being a little more than half that of Canada's postage stamp Province of Manitoba. In trade Portugal falls away below Canada. Her annual total exports and imports amounting to less than 100,000,000 milreis, a milreis being slightly more than a dollar, while Canada's trade amounts to about $600,000,000. Portugal's population is entirely Roman in religion, the figures of 1900 showing only 4,491 Protestants and 461 Jews. Lisbon is about the same size as Toronto, having a population of 300,000.

Its Reflected Glory.

The relative importance of places is sometimes confusingly stated. For instance, Dr. A. S. Vort was once asked in New York if "Toronto were not the town where you changed cars for Cobalt."

A woman innocently aroused the ire of a resident of St. Catharines by saying about that picturesque spot, "Oh, yes, that's where our automobile broke down on the way from Buffalo to Toronto."

GURNEY-OXFORD

For the Children

A Young Cowboy in Full Panoply.

The young cowboy in the picture was one of many who helped to welcome Colonel Roosevelt on his recent visit to Cheyenne. There were grown cowboys from all parts of the cattle country, and they gave the former president a great time. There were roping of steers and riding wild horses and all the amusements common at such meetings. There was quite a company of little cowboys present, and they took great pains to give the true cowboy yell. Like the picture shows above, they were fully equipped with sombrero, crop, rope and pistol, and they made a brave show.

Stag Tag.

For this merry romp two short dowel rods of sticks are decorated with "shoo-shoos" of shredded tissue paper. The player who becomes "it" takes one wand in each hand and thus armed sallies forth to capture other players. This is done by tagging them lightly with one or the other of the wands. As soon as any player has been tagged he joins hands with the person tagging him and takes one of the shoo-shoos in the unoccupied hand.

A third person tagged by either of these two joins hands in the same way, and so the fun continues until a long unwieldy line is working its way around the room in pursuit of one nimble player bent on giving his pursuers a merry dance for it.

No More Drums.

In the battle of Waterloo the English forces had over ninety drummer boys killed, and the French lost nearly 200. From that date on the armies of the world began to dispense with drummers in war, and now no army has them. Bugles are used instead of drums, and most buglers are at least twenty years old.

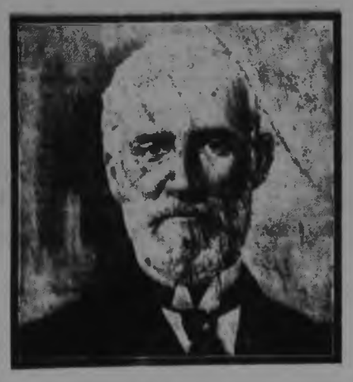
"I FEEL IT MY DUTY

To Give You a Statement In Regard To 'Fruit-a-tives'"

HARDWICKE, MIRAMICHI, N.B., Jan. 17th, 1910.

"I feel it my duty to give to you and the world an unsolicited statement in respect to the wonderful cure I received by taking 'Fruit-a-tives' Chronic Constipation was the complaint I suffered with for years. My general health was miserable as a result of this disease, and I became depressed and alarmed. I was treated by physicians without the slightest permanent benefit, and I tried all kinds of pills and tablets but nothing did me any good.



I saw the strong testimonial in favor of 'Fruit-a-tives' by New Brunswick's 'Grand Old Man', the Hon. John Costigan, and I knew that anything he stated was honest and true and given only to help his fellow-men. I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and the effects were most marvellous, and now I am entirely well from all my Chronic Constipation that I suffered from for so many years. My general health is once more excellent and I cannot say too much to express my thanks for the great benefits derived from taking 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

A. G. WILLISTON.

"Fruit-a-tives" is not gotten up by druggists or expert chemists—who know nothing about disease and the needs of the human body—but is the scientific discovery of a well known physician, and is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices.

THE OLD, OLD STORY

A Short Story.

"Of course you said no?" said Mrs. Desmond.

Her voice rang across the glowing atmosphere of the firelit room like an east wind cutting through the air.

"I—I didn't say no," came the reply. The voice of the girl who answered was very soft and low; it was also firm and decided. "I said yes."

"You didn't say yes?" shrieked the mother.

"I did. I meant yes."

"And you mean to tell me that Ralph Byrne had the impertinence, the audacity, the unparalleled impudence to offer you—what?"

"He offered me Ralph Byrne."

"Why, the man hasn't got a penny!"

"He will have."

"Will have! Will have! We shall all be in our quiet graves a little later on, and then things will be equal, whether we have fared luxuriously, or starved in what these modern fanatics call our 'earth life.' I have finished with you, Madeline, finished with you!"

"I can't help it, mother," she said. There was a gleam of tears in the great violet eyes upturned from the low seat which surrounded the fire.

"You can't help it! This is the reward of all I have done for you children; this is all the return that you make to me for my sacrifice years and years and years together. If I hadn't so considered you children's future, if I hadn't denied myself and pinched myself, and striven to keep up as good a position as we had when your father was alive, you would have been proper helpmeets for men like Ralph Byrne."

"I can't help it, mother." The voice was wavering a little, there was the sound of tears in the soft and yet decided tones; indeed, the girl was very near to breaking down altogether.

"Ralph Byrne!" Mrs. Desmond went on. "Ralph Byrne! What is he going to keep you on?"

"He is going to make money."

"Oh, is he! That kind of man is always going, to make money, he never gets there; he never makes it. You dare nineteen, you are the eldest but one of my five daughters, and to you and Georgie I naturally look for a suitable example to set before the others. And all you do for me is to engage yourself to Ralph Byrne. I'm ashamed of you, Madeline."

"I can't help it, mother. I—I—got fond of him. I don't think there's anybody in the world like him. I—I'd rather—yes, I would honestly, mother—live on twopence a day with Ralph than I'd marry marry a millionaire who was somebody else."

"And you might have married Sir George Stanton," said Mrs. Desmond bitterly.

"Oh, mother, how could I marry Sir George? He's so fat."

"Fat?" echoed her mother.

"Yes, mother, so fat. And he is so podgy, and so pinky. There wouldn't be a bit of romance or anything else."

"Romance," repeated Mrs. Desmond, "romance! My dear child, answer me this: Will romance buy you such a gown as you have on at this moment? Will romance give you such a luncheon as you ate to-day? Will romance provide you with a maid? Will romance take you to Paris, take you into London, give you the thousand and one things that you are accustomed to? No, no, no! Think what you will be like when he is working to make money; living in a grubby little house on the Tolbridge Road, with one grubby little servant and half a dozen children; doing your own cooking, doing half your own washing, tramping up and down your bedroom at night with a baby, and such a very small bedroom that it will have very little tramping room. Oh, I haven't patience with you!"

"But, mother—"

"Well."

"We shouldn't be married until he is in a position."

"A position! I should think his ideas of a position are very different to your or mine. I don't believe in ten engagements; I don't believe in a cruel waste of the best years of a woman's life, waiting while a man achieves success. It is a wrong thing. A man has no right to ask a girl to marry him, or be engaged to him—which isn't at all one and the same—unless he can provide her a home which is at least as good as the one she is living in. I have known more than one girl, Madeline, who waited years for a man, and then the man married somebody younger, fairer, wealthier. I knew one girl," she went on, speaking in her well-bred, cruel voice, "I knew one girl who had a lover. She was a cousin of mine. She's dead now, poor thing; you never knew her. He was a handsome man with a way with him, just such another as Ralph Byrne. They got engaged; they were so much in love that time was nothing. He was willing to wait seven years for Rachel; and in the end Rachel waited seven years for her Jacob. And when the seven years were over, she was willing and ready to wait seven more. And he married—Leah."

"Well?" said Madeline, her voice quivered a little in spite of herself; "Well?"

"It wasn't well. Leah was the daughter of his chief. Marriage with her meant a partnership, but it did not mean waiting another seven years and getting Rachel at the end of them. There is no marriage of that kind in our country. She lived just seven years, and on Jacob's seventh wedding day she died.

There was a long silence. The smart silver kettle on the tea-tray hissed and bubbled merrily; the cinders dropped one by one on the hearth; and at last Madeline Desmond spoke:

"I never knew that you had such a story as that in your family, mother," she said. "I wonder you never told us. Was that Cousin Agnes?"

"Yes, that was my cousin Agnes. She was thirty-five when she died; she might have been twice thirty-five in everything but the texture of her skin and the abundance of her hair. I never can bear to think about my cousin Agnes. If I could have killed that man I would have done it. I met him, the last time I was in London, at an evening party Lenore and I were at. It was one night you had a headache, and you said you would sit quietly by the window and go to bed early. It turned me over to see him. To think of that broken heart, of all those crushed and broken illusions! Can you wonder that I am not glad to welcome Ralph Byrne to be a Jacob to my Rachel? You think I'm hard, you think I'm cruel, you think I'm worldly. Perhaps I am."

"I—I didn't say so," said Madeline. "I never said so. And I quite see what you mean; I quite understand as you do, but I don't think that Ralhp will ever treat me like that."

"Neither did Agnes O'Connor. Up to the end of the seven years I wouldn't have ventured to say one word against Jacob. And yet he left her. He married—Leah."

CHAPTER II.

Before she changed her dress for dinner that night, Madeline Desmond sat down at the little writing table in her bedroom and wrote a note. It was to Ralph Byrne.

So the following afternoon found Ralph Byrne in possession of the quaint Dutch summer-house when Madeline Desmond arrived to keep the tryst.

"Something has happened?" he said to her.

"Yes, everything has happened. It's no use you going to mother, Ralph. She'll not hea rof an engagement between us."

"But why?"

"It's a long story. But I feel that she has right on her side. I feel that I have no business to give her the anxiety that an engagement between us would be. I—Oh, you don't know what it is to me to give you up. I am not like most girls of my age. I'm not like my sisters. They're had a dozen sweethearts apiece—even the twins, who are only just promoted to the dignity of long frocks, and are not yet out of the schoolroom. I never had any favorite boys; I'm not like them; but I see that it won't do. Last night—I'll tell you all about it."

Then she told him the whole story that her mother told her the night before. "Can you wonder," she wound up, "that mother is so dead against long engagements?"

"No, I can't wonder. I can't forget that I've nothing to offer you—nothing but myself. It's no use my protesting that I shouldn't change. Who knows? I might. I suppose this Jacob, as you call him, didn't set out with the idea of marrying anybody but Rachel. But look here, Madelinee, I shan't be in Blankhampton many days longer. You know that I'm going back to town to grind; and I will grind. If you forget me, I'll never reproach you. you marry some other fellow—well, it will be better that we found it out sooner rather than later. I bought you an engagement ring this morning. I was rather extravagant over it. I suppose it wouldn't be quite fair to ask you to make it?"

"Let me see it," said she.

He took it out of his pocket. It was a thick gold ring set with a large sapphire and two diamonds, just a broad band such as a man might wear.

"Put it on your finger," she said; "and if you are able to come back, you can give it to me then."

"I wish you could have taken it," he said, "even if you wouldn't wear it."

"What's the good of having a thing I can't wear? Look here, what is that little silver heart you wear on your watch-chain? It's an absurd thing for a man to wear."

"That? Oh, it has no tender memories. My old nurse gave it to me when I was a mere boy and had my first watch and chain. She got it in India somewhere. Her husband was a soldier and she had followed the drum with him all over the world. She's dead and gone years ago. Will you have it?"

"Yes, I could take that. Nobody would ask any questions. I'll put it on one of my silver bangles, and it will be something to remind mo of you when you are gone."

It was wonderful how steical these two young people were. Anybody listening to their conversation would have thought that they were quite indifferent as to whether they met again or not; but there is an indifference which covers a tragedy of suffering. Madeline stayed in the old Dutch summer-house until the winter dusk was falling, and they said good-bye to each other—a literal good-bye—and then they tore themselves apart, and the girl went home alone with all her love frozen at the fountain head, and the man turned back into the summer-house and sat there motionless until the calls of the gardeners to clear the grounds roused him and made him, too, seek the shelter of his hotel.

Oh, these partings! Oh, the bitter black blank of lookin gforward over years which must be unillumined by the smile of the one who makes life worth living! Oh, the wrenching apart of twin souls, the tearing asunder of true affinities! Well, well, parting is always the same all the world over. Men and women who believe themselves very much in love suffer just as much in parting as those whose hearts have been enslaved for all time; but oh, the difference in the years that follow! Oh, the length of the years when the heart is elsewhere than with the body! The wrench of parting is as the drawing of a tooth—agony for the moment—but it is the everlasting pain which sometimes follows which frets away youth as moth doth fret out a garment.

Madeline Desmond went straight home from the Winter Garden. She found her mother alone. It was not a very usual circumstance that Mrs. Desmond should be alone at that hour, but the other girls had gone their different ways, and Mrs. Desmond, who was suffering from a chill, was in the house alone.

"I want to tell you, mother," said Madeline, when she had thrown aside her wraps and had taken her cup of tea from her mother's hand, "that I've been with Ralph this afternoon."

"Yes?" Mrs. Desmond looked up sharply

"I've told him that it is quite impossible for us to be engaged."

"You have not tied yourself in any way?"

"Not in any way, mother—neither he nor I."

"My dear child," said Mrs. Desmond, "you won't regret this. If he goes away and forgets, it is better that you should know now—at least, you will find it better that you have not waited. It is such a slur on a woman to be plighted for years and forsaken. You can't hide an engagement; you can't explain it away when it's broken as Jacob broke his."

"Is his name Jacob—his real name?" She asked the question not because she wanted to know, but because she wanted to draw the conversation away somewhat from her own case.

"No. His name—I don't feel inclined to tell you. It wouldn't do you any good to know it. I would rather never stain my lips by uttering it. His name is well known. He is a highly honoured man in a distinguished position."

"Is he happy?"

"How could such a man be happy? I never saw—Leah until that night last season. I looked at him just for an instant, just enough to convey to him that he was not to dare to speak to me, and then I turned and I looked at her from head to foot, and I looked back at him. One glance at his scarlet face, although they've been married for twenty years, was enough to show me what kind of happiness is his portion. Whatever it is, it's more than he deserves."

"Yes, I quite agree with you," said Madeline; "I quite agree with you, mother. And now will you do something for me?"

"If I can."

"I want you to regard the incident as closed. Please don't speak about it. The girls don't know that he had any serious idea of marrying me, and if I'm not worried about it, I shall get over it—at all events it won't hurt quite so much."

"I haven't spoken of it to a soul, Madeline," said Mrs. Desmond, keeping her eyes very intently upon her cup, which she was engaged in filling, "and I shouldn't dream of speaking of your private affairs to your sisters any more than I should, under similar circumstances, of theirs to you. You may trust me, Madeline. I knew that I must have seemed hard and worldly to you. I don't like you to feel that I am that."

"I haven't said so," said Madeline.

"So you told me last night. You haven't said so, but you haven't yet told me that you haven't thought so."

"I don't think," said Madeline, "that I have even thought it. I—I could talk to you better in a year's time, or a month, or a week. Just now I am sore and hurt. I feel like the child who wanted to buy the jeweller's shop with half-a-crown. You must give me a little while to get over it, and to get back to my natural state of—"

"Of what?" said the mother almost pitcously.

"Well, perhaps of unfeelingness. At all events," she went on, "I can tell you this for your comfort, mother—that I would rather you had told me all that was in your mind; I would rather that you, having such a story in your own experience, should tell me the truth. Girls aren't told enough of the truth nowadays—I don't know what they used to be. According to tradition, a girl was like a sheet of white paper until she was married. I don't know how it worked; it doesn't work now. I suppose the new condition of things has altered everything, but I know that I would rather be told the very worst than be left merely to take my chance of what might or might not happen to me. And I'll never reproach you, mother, come what may."

After that evening the mother and daughter never reverted to the subject of Ralph Byrne. He called and left a card with a small "P.P.C." in the corner when he knew that Mrs Desmond would not be at home; and then he turned his back upon Blankhampton, that quaint old city of churches and ancient buildings, and went back to the busy life from which he had come.

And time went on. Time, how much of it? Does it matter? Time is, or should be, according to how you measure it. At the bar, where Ralph Byrne was wooing fortune, fifteen years is looked upon as a mere apprenticeship. As a matter of fact, five whole years had gone by since Madeline Desmond and Ralph Byrne had parted in the old Dutch summer-house in the Winter Garden at Blankhampton; five long years during which not one word had come to tell her that he remembered her existence.

"My dear Madeline," said Mrs. Desmond one day. "Do you think you are wise to refuse Major Endicott?"

"Oh, I don't know, mother. Perhaps I am not very wise. I don't mean to marry him, if that's what you want to know."

"But why not? He's so nice, so wealthy, so well-born."

"Yes, I know, dear; but he doesn't suit me."

"It seems such a pity," said Mrs. Desmond, wistfully. "Not that I would persuade you, Madeline, not at all; only you are four-and-twenty."

"And if I were four-and-thirty, or four-and-forty, I should say the same. He's very fine and large, mother, but he's not for me—most emphatically not for me, darling. You have got your Georgie married, and Lenore married, and little Avis; it won't be long before Jose follows the example of Avis, and then you'll have nobody but me to look after you and see that you are comfortable and happy, and that you get a good time. Don't you think you and I were made for each other?"

"No, I don't," said Mrs. Desmond, shortly. "When you are married I look forward to having a very gay time. I shall have five married daughters to visit, and shall have the very gayest time that I have ever had in my life. The idea of two lone women in a big house like this is too terrible.'"

"But, dear, you have four married daughters to visit now, and we shall have four sets of grandchildren to visit us."

"It's no use talking to me, Madeline. I should like you to marry, but not until you meet the right man."

"When I meet the right man I'll marry him, I promise you. Have another egg?"

"No thanks."

"Have some potted shrimps, or some of this foie gras?"

"A little of the foie gras," said Mrs. Desmond.

"Oh, is that you, Jose? Well, you are late."

"Yes, dear, I am very late," said Jose in a small meek voice. "But I was so tired this morning. I danced such a lot last night. I'm sleepy yet."

"My dear child, you should have slept yourself out and had your breakfast in bed. Did you really have a good time?"

While the two were discussing the previous evening's dance, Madeline picked up the newspaper. The first words that struck her were those at the head of a column—"A Silver Heart."

She put the paper down as if she had been stung. Oh, why did she ever think about him? Why did she carry that silver heart always on her left wrist? Because she was a fool, a fool. It was the old story of Jacob and Rachel over again. No, she wouldn't be weak. She was a strong woman.

So she took up the newspaper again and saw that "The Silver Heart" was the title of a play, a play that had been produced the previous evening in London, a play that had taken the world by storm, a play by an utterly unknown author, an author who had no nom de guerre, who did not appear at the production in response to the calls of "Author!" who preferred to keep his identity an absolute secret.

"There's some lucky Madeline? Well, as a matter of fact, she happened that very morning to be walking down 56, Thomas Street at Blankhampton. She had half-a-dozen commissions to execute; her mind was intent upon them. She was merely on the look-out for young men, as the majority of girls are in cathedral cities, and when somebody stopped and said: "Madeline, don't you know me?" she gave a start, a little cry. "I see," he said, "that you are wearing the silver heart that I gave you. Did you see the paper this morning? I didn't find the Bar quick enough, Madeline. I took the silver tray for a guerdon. I've got there, Madeline! Where are you going? What are you doing? Let's go up to the Dutch summer-house, Madeline, and I'll tell you all about it."

IMPOVERISHED BLOOD

A Common and a Dangerous Trouble—You Must Enrich the Blood to Escape Danger

Anaemia is simply a lack of blood. It is one of the most common and at the same time most dangerous diseases with which growin girls suffer. It is common because the blood so often becomes impoverished during development, when girls are too frequently allowed to over-study, overwork and suffer from a lack of exercise. It is dangerous because of the stealthiness of its approach, often being well developed before its presence is recognized, and because of its tendency to grow so steadily worse, if not promptly checked, that it may run into consumption.

The value of the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills should be known to every mother in the land. These Pills make new, rich blood, tone the organs and nerves, bring a glow of health to pale, sallow cheeks, and drive away the weakness, headaches, faintness, heart palpitation and loss of energy so noticeable in young girls who are suffering from anaemia. To all such Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are an actual life saver. Miss Mabel McTavish, Prince Albert, Sask., says: "In my case I can only say that life has lost its magic; all work was a trial and even pleasure only a task. When I went up a flight of stairs I was ready to drop from sheer weakness and I had begun to think life would be a continued burden. But all this is now changed, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These were recommended to me, and after taking them for about a month I found my health renewed. I could sleep better, my appetite returned, and I was so strong and well that housework was no longer a burden to me. My sister seemed to be going the same way last summer and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were at once sent for and two boxes made her as well as ever. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are now the prized medicine in our home, and doctor bills have been fewer since we discovered the virtues of this great medicine."

Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Golden Text—She hath done what she could. Mark xiv:8.

If we do what we can is that a sacceptable to God as if we could do a thousand times more? Why?

Verse 1—Can it be demonstrated that the sayings of Jesus, which we have, make a complete statement of Christianity, even if they were not supplemented by any thing else. Give your reasons.

Why, if any, reason is there to believe that Jesus had eluded his enemies until he had said all he wanted to say?

Verses 2-5—What wa sthe underlying motive which induced, that great and sacred body, the Jewish Sanhedrin, to lan to bring about the death of so good a man as Jesus?

If an assembly of Christian Ministers, or laymen, gives way to jealousy, or hatred are they liable to do as cruel a deed as the crucifixions of Jesus, and then persuade themselves they are doing right?

PORT HOPE IS WAKING UP

The town of Port Hope has started a movement with a view to establishing a General Hospital. At the present time, Port Hope is without hospital accommodation of any kind, and is, as a matter of fact, one of thete wtowns of its size in the Province that has not a public institution of this kind. Peterboro, Lindsay, Cobourg, and Belleville in this district have excellent hospitals. Port Hope feels that they should not be behind the times in this respect, and the citizens are now making a move in that direction. It appears tha tthe late Miss Carr, a former resident of Port Hope, left $2,000 to be applied towards the project. There are apparently no large bequests in sight, but the ladies of the town who are entering into the project with mon henthusiasm have collected the sum of $800.00. Of course the promoters of the project are a long way from t'e amount that will be necessary to erect and maintain an hospital. In the meantime, several committees have been struck with a view to pushing matters along, one of which is a site committee, which will choose a suitable piece of property forthwith, on which the new hospital will be erected.

MANY PEOPLE WILL MISS CAPTAIN SAM LAMBERT

In the death of Mr. Samuel Lambert, at the home of his son Mr. Harry Lambert, at Hastings, last week, the Otonabee and Rice Lake waters loses one of its most interesting characters. To steamboat men and people generally who are in touch with traffic on these waters, the aged wheelman was familiarly, though respectfully, known as Sam. Just plain Sam, was sufficient when one wished to refer to the person who wheeled the old Golden Eye on some memorable occasion, or the old Isaac Butts, or some other local craft that churlie dthe waters of the Otonabee River and Rice Lake, years and years ago. No man knew the channel from Peterborough to Healey's Falls better than Sam Lambert; no one, we venture to state, has travelled this route more times, and no one loved these waters to a greater degree. Captain Sam Lambert was not particularly talkative, but occasionally he could become reminiscent, and refer to his early days as a navigator on the Rice Lake waters. He met some interesting and noted people in his day, but the most noted was the late King Edward VII. When Prince of Wales, the late King, as is well known, visited Peterborough on his memorable tour of Canada in 1860. He came to Peterborough from Cobourg over the old Cobourg and Peterborough railroad. Those in charge of the arrangements felt that it was not wise to risk the life of the future King of England in passing over the old bridge that stretched across Rice Lake, from Harwood to Hiawatha. Accordingly arrangements were made to carry the Prince across the lake in a tugboat ,after which he resumed his journey to Peterborough by rail. Sam Lambert was at the helm. His steady hand wheeled the tug across the lake and landed Britain's future Monarch safely on the Otonabee shore. Since that time Sam has wheeled many different boats and carried many thousands of people safely to various points on the Otonabee River and Rice Lake. He loved steamboating—especially steamboating on the Otonabee and Rice Lake. He had seen many steamboats come and go and had outlived every other local steamboat man of 50 years ago. He was never happier than when wheeling his craft down the winding Otonabee or over Rice Lake. Everyone knew Sam, and he has left many friends to mourn his passing away. He was the link between the past and and the present—the only one left of the early navigators on these waters to tell first hand stories of early navigation below Peterborough.

His death at a ripe old age will not remove him from the memories o fthose of the present generation who knew him, and we venture to say that in the stillness of the summer evening, when a steamer is gliding across Rice Lake or up the Otonabee River, the captain or the mate, or someone else, may tell some interesting story of that once familiar, but now departed, local navigator, Sa mLambert.

BELMONT PARK, P. I., OCT. 30.—While making his nineteenth lap this morning, Aviator Leblanc came down with a rush. His face was badly cut and he was in a semi-conscious condition when picked up. Internal injuries are feared. Leblanc was going sixty miles an hour when the gasoline gave out. He began a descent, but lost control of the machine, and dashed against a telegraph pole, breaking it in two. The machine was wrecked, but the aviator had thrown himself from the vehicle before he struck the pole Walter Brookins, the a Wrigt machine, fell thirty feet shortly after starting. The airship was wrecked and Brookins may be badly hurt internally. He was writhing in pain when he was hurried to the Emergency Hospital.

WORKING WOMEN

Here is a Helping Hand—A Newton Woman's Experience

You know just how it is yourself—when you are tired out, perhaps a little run down, and hardly able to drag around, life is a burden, you are irritable, nervous, depressed and every little task seems like a mountain.

Miss Katharine Burns, of Newton, Mass., says: "About six months ago I was in a run-down condition and my blood was very poor. I had taken several medicines prescribed by physicians, but they seemed to do me no good. Finally Vinol was recommended and from the first bottle I noticed a great improvement. I have taken six bottles and I feel as well as ever, and I would recommend Vinol to anybody needing a good tonic to build them up and make them strong." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

We want to ask every woman who finds herself in this condition to try Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, without oil, with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not help them.

We know Vinol will create an appetite, aid digestion, make pure, rich blood, and in this way build up and strengthen the run-down, overworked nervous system. McDermid and Ivey, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

DISTINGUISHED SCHOLAR TO PREACH IN ALL SAINTS CHURCH

Sir:—May I have space in your paper to call the attention of the men of the City to the distinguished visitor who is to speak at All Saints Church on Sunday afternoon at 4.40, an hour which does not conflict with the attendance at their own churches. I ask the privilege because so distinguished a scholar rarely visits Peterborough and yet is so little known here. Dr. Griffith Thomas was a leader in the Church in England, one of the present group of the great scholars of Oxford University, Principal of Wycliffe Hall there, editor of the "Churchman" and contributor to the papers, author of "The Catholic Faith", "Christianity is Christ", "Methods of Bible Study" "The Apostle Peter", etc. He speaks with authority for the old and consecutive standards of Christianity, and I not merely invite the men of Peterborough to come and hear him, so far as their duties to their churches permit, but ask their cooperation to give him a worthy audience.

PLANS WERE MADE FOR THE TAG DAY CRUSADE

Children's Aid Society Makes Arrangements for the Big Event by Which They Hope to Replenish the Funds

Peterborough is to have a Tag Day!

The officers of the Children's Aid Society held a meeting yesterday afternoon in the City Council Chamber to make arrangements. Mr. Peter Campbell, the treasurer, occupied the chair, in the absence of President T. F. Matthews, who was called to Toronto on business.

It was decided to organize a "tag day" crusade, to take place in the near future. For the benefit of those who do not understand just what a "tag" campaign means, it may be explained that a large number of young ladies will be set at work soliciting donations for the Children's Aid Society and will give in exchange a tag showing that the wearer has paid his financial tribute to the work of the Society.

It was estimated that about fifty tag girls would be needed. The work of drawing up a plan for the territory they should cover was the next thing to consider. It was suggested that the territory should be from Water street west to Aylmer street and from London street to the C. P. R. station or Dalhousie street. The divisions were then considered, and suggested as follows. From London street to Murray; from Murray to Hunter; from Hunter to Charlotte street.

Mr. Travers proposed that the ladies present elect a committee, to choose the girls who were to act, with power to add to their numbers. Mr Goodwill seconded the motion. The ladies then promised to act.

Messrs Campbell, Goodwill and Travers then promised to draw the plans for the girls to go by.

It will now be up to the citizens to watch for the "Tag Girl."

THE EXPRESS BUSINESS IS TIED UP BY THE BIG STRIKE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, OCT. 30.—The business of the United States, Wells, Fargo and Adams Express Companies is practically at a standstill at New York. The Jersey City and Hoboken terminals are stacked with undelivered packages and the depot sidings are jammed full of cars waiting to be unloaded. Strikers and strike-breakers are working in the vicinity of every terminal, and the police of three cities, armed with riot sticks, are at their wits end to maintain peace. So far no one has been fatally hurt. The strike began when the United States Company refused to pay waggon helpers $5.00 more per month. The strike leaders threaten to spread the strike to every city where teamsters and helpers are organized. The Federation of Labour and the Civic Federation are trying to settle the strike.

YELLOW SLAVE TRADE BAD ON THE COAST

Special to The Examiner.

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., OCT. 29.—Miss Martin, a returned missionary from British Columbia, declared in an address here last night that the yellow slave trade went almost unchecked in Victoria and Vancouver. Girls were imported from China at $100 and upwards for immoral and domestic purposes; girls were treated with horrid cruelty. One girl who came to the Women's Home had her body scarred with burns, because she ran away from her mistress. The latter seared the girl's body with a red-hot iron, then tied her hand and foot, and left her all night in a cold room. The yellow men had four or five wives, said Miss Martin.

THIEF STOCKS STORE WITH STOLEN JEWELLERY

Special to The Examiner:

HOBOKEN, N.J., OCT. 30.—Henry Anthony, after confessing he had robbed thirty houses in Passaic, to-day led thirty victims, women, to a jewelry store, saying: "I helped to stock this place, look around and see what you can find." Then Anthony escorted the delegation upstairs, but urged silence so as not to disturb the jeweller's new baby. More goods were recovered and Anthony was taken back to jail.

Was Taken Very Ill With Ptomaine Poisoning From Eating Salmon

As a result of eating canned salmon, Mrs. Timothy Garvey, of the Township of Douro suffered considerable pain last evening from ptomaine poisoning. The womin had the salmon for supper last evening, and immediately after eating it, she was taken violently ill and a doctor had to be called. Dr. McNally attended the woman and found her to be suffering from ptomaine poison, the cause of which he attributed to the salmon. Although still feeling pretty ill, Mrs. Garvey is some better to-day.

OUTBREAK OF SCARLET FEVER IN OTONABEE

South Monaghan Families Are Likewise Affected — Is Worse Around Zion and Hale's Bridge.

WATER IS BLAMED

An outbreak of Scarlet Fever has taken place in the neighborhood of Zion, Otonabee and Hale's Bridge. Some of the younger members of the families of Mr. Walter Dickson and Mr. Robert Jackson, on the Otonabee side of the river are ill with the disease while Mr. Norman Breckenridge and some of his family in South Monaghan are also afflicted. The children of Messrs. Jackson and Dickson have been attending the Zion school. The Municipal authorities are looking after the matter. There is no accounting for any particular cause of the outbreak but credit is generally given to the water.

TELLER IS ARRESTED

Special to the Examiner.

MONTREAL, OCT. 29—Ernest Lemoyne, a teller in the Hochelaga Bank, was arrested yesterday as he was leaving the bank on a charge brought by Mrs Lecompte, the widow of a wealthy St. Theresa merchant. She says that Lemoyne and her daughter were to be married and during the engagement Mrs. Lecompte gave Lemoyne titles to property worth thirty thousand with the understanding that he could sell them to good advantage owing to his position. He quarrelled with the daughter and when Mrs. Lecompte asked for the titles he declined to return them. She says he offered the titles for sale below their value and then she had him arrested.

WELL KNOWN BARRISTER PASSES AWAY

Special to The Examiner:

ST. JOHN, N.B., OCT. 30.—Charles A. Peck, K.C., one of the oldest barristers in the province, died at his home, Hopewell Hill. He was formerly a member of the Legislature. He was identified with large railroad and corporation interests.

NEW SYSTEM OF FAT REDUCTION

The saying that "there is nothing new under the sun" does not now apply to fat people. Here is something new for them—a new sensation, a new pleasure, a new and graceful figure, easily found by anyone who is passing beyond the limits of slimness. Everyone has heard of the Marmola Prescription, that harmless combination of fat-defying elements discovered by one of our foremost physicians. Now, from the same high authority there comes another idea of condensing these same pure, harmless ingredients into a pleasant little tablet. Taken after eating and at bedtime they help the stomach to dispose of all the fatty foods, converting them into compact, solid flesh, muscle and energy, without dieting or exercise. Marmola Prescription Tablets regulate the entire system—do for you what bodily exertion and self-denial can not do and the fat, once routed, is gone for good. You can prove all this at a trifling cost. Marmola Prescription Tablets are sold by all druggists or sent post paid by the Marmola Co., 323 Monroe Av., Detroit, Mich. A large case—sufficient to bring lasting results—is but 75c.

SURVEY FOR TORONTO AND EASTERN RAILWAY NEARLY COMPLETED AND WORK STARTS SOON

Capital is Provided--Peterborough Will Have a Branch of New Railway, of which Oshawa is to be the Centre.

SPECIAL EXPRESS SERVICE

The Toronto Globe says:

The Toronto & Eastern Railway, for which a charter has been obtained, will in a few months be in course of construction. It is to run from Toronto to Cobourg, with extensions of the system from Port Hope to Peterborough, from Oshawa to Lindsay, and from a point in the Township of Scarboro' to Uxbridge. The surveys are now practically completed, it being expected that they will all be finished this week, as a satisfactory route has been found.

Local capitalists are the provisional directors of the road, and these are backed by influential railway projectors. The scheme has already been successfully financed, and the work of construction is likely to be prosecuted with vigour in the early spring months of 1911. The money is practically all in hand. Mr. R. H. Rothray of Toronto, has recently been appointed Superintendent of the line.

Oshawa Important Centre.

Oshawa, in the opinion of the railway people, is the important comunity along the road, and is going to be made a centre at which farm and dairy produce will be gathered for shipment, mostly to Toronto. The T. & E. Railway Company proposes to give every facility for farmers to market their produce and merchandise three days each week. They will convey this by express during the night at freight rates. Large quantities of milk, fruits in season, butter and eggs will, it is expected, be handled, and by being rushed through in the cool hours of the night will be delivered in the best condition. The express service at freight rates will, no doubt, appeal to those who have such produce to market.

The Prospects.

"You are safe in saying," remarked Mr. F. L. Fowke, of Oshawa, M.P., for South Ontario, from whom The Globe gleaned this information, and who has had charge of the bill in the Legislature, "that the passenger traffic will be considerable from the beginning.

THANKSGIVING

From all that dwell below the skies,
Let the Creator's praise arise;
Let the Redeemer's Name be sung
Through every land, by every tongue.
Eternal are Thy mercies, Lord,
Eternal truth attends Thy word:
Thy praise shall sound from shore to shore,
Till suns shall rise and set no more.
Praise God, from Whom all blessings flow;
Praise Him, all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Amen.

THANKSGIVING MARKET THE BIGGEST OF THE SEASON

Enormous Crowd of Buyers and Sellers--Naturally the Poultry Showing Was the Feature

An enormous crowd was on the market to-day. It was the largest and best market of the season. There was a magnificent display of turkeys, geese, chickens and ducks on the inside market, while the square was lined with loads of potatoes, apples, and vegetables, as well as fowl. It may safely be said that to-day's market was the most successful of the season. The inside market was so crowded that one found it difficult to get around. And the tables were all filled and many of the people had to pile their fowl on chairs, some even setting the basketsfuls of butter, eggs and fowl on the floor. The demand for everything was as great as the supply, so that the prices remained stationary, and about the same as last Saturday. The prices on the marked square were as follows:

Pigs, $8 per pair.
Potatoes, 85c and 90c a bag.
Winter apples, $4 per bbl
Apples (cooking), 95c per bag. 25c per pk.
Pears, 35c and 45c per pk.
Cabbage, 50c per dozen heads.
Onions, 25c per pk.; $1 per bag.
Carrots, 15c per pk.

Inside market prices were as follows:

Geese, $1 to $1.50.
Eggs, 29c and 30c.
Butter, 27c and 28c.
Ducks, 70c and 75c.
Turkeys, $1.75 to $3.25.

Not much hay was up for sale to-day. About four loads constitutted the lot. The price asked for the loose hay was $13.00. The farmers stated that it was selling from $13.00 to $16.00 according to quality. Baled hay was selling at $13.00 per ton.

Live hogs were selling to-day at $7.00. Dressed ones were $9.50, which will also be the prevailing prices for next week. Farmers' hides were 8 cents and butchers' hides 7 cents, no change having taken place since last quotation.

'The Yankee Girl" The Best Show Blanche Ring Has Ever Appeared In

Blanche Ring will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House on Friday night, November 4th, when she will be seen in Peterborough for the first time in her musical play, "The Yankee Girl." In this vehicle Miss Ring has recently terminated a lengthy and prosperous run at the New York Herald Square Theatre, and with it she has met with immense success in all the cities she has since visited.

"The Yankee Girl" is said to be the best medium Miss Ring has ever had for the exploitation of her many delightful talents for funmaking and her role is said to fit her to a nicety. The book, an amusing and interesting one, is by George V. Hobart, and the musical score a tuneful and pleasing one, is by Silvio Hein.

Miss Ring's supporting company is headed by Harry Gilfoil, whose mimicry and imitations are always productive of generous applause and laughter. Others in the cast include William P. Carleton, Halliday and Curley, Marguerite Wright, Alfred DeBall, Juliette Lange, Juan Villasana, Paul Porter, Henry Bergman, Cyril Ring, Margaret Malcolm, E. J. Caldwell and Fannie Kidston. The chorus is the large and beautiful one which appeared with Miss Ring during her long run with "The Yankee Girl," at the Herald Square Theatre.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL CONCERT UNDER AUSPICES OF THE BAND

The inclement weather had its effect upon the attendance at the third series of popular concerts under the auspices of the 57th Band, but in spite of that fact there was a large crowd present in the Armouries to hear the splendid programme provided. The assisting artist, Mr. H. M. Bennett, the well known Toronto entertainer proved a most valuable contribution and his comic songs and monologues were received with most enthusiastic applause. His methods are original and decidedly funny and his offerings are always in the best of taste. His first number, a comic song, "For Months and Months", introducing a reference to Wellmans balloon episode was enthusiastically encored and he had to respond twice. Later on he was seen in his Harry Lauder imitation giving that amusing song, "The Wedding O' Sandy McNab". For an encore he contributed another Lauder song. His last number was, "I am Going to be Married", in which he gave a very amusing portrayal of an old maid for whom the wedding bells are about to ring out.

The band's numbers included the two beautiful operatic overtures, "The Barber of Seville," and "The Bohemian Girl", both of which were played magnificently and earned hearty applause. A delightful feature was the Cornet Solo by Sergeant Hughes with band accompaniment. The effect was enhanced by the fact that Sergt. Hughes played from the Sergeant's gallery and the number was one of the most pleasing of the evening.

The last number by the band was that Remick combination of the tuneful song numbers known as "Remick's Hits No. 7", charmingly played by Mr. Gliddon's organization.

The next concert in the series will likely take place in the Market Hall.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED ONCE MORE

Dodd's Kidney Pills Again Vanquish Terrible Ailment

Alcide Tramblay Issues Statement For the Benefit of Others.—Good News For Sufferers From Kidney Disease.

Mistassini, Lac St. Jean, Que., Oct. 25.—(Special)—That even the deadly Bright's Disease, the most fatal form of Kidney Disease, can be secured by Dodd's Kidney Pills after all other means have failed has again been proved in the case of Mr. Alcide Tramblay, a well-known resident of this place. In order that other sufferers may benefit by this experience Mr. Tramblay has given the following statement for publication:

"I was troubled with Bright's Disease, Rheumatism and Gravel for seven years. Three doctors prescribed for me, but they did not help me. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing, I was always tired and nervous and had dark circles under my eyes.

"I heard of other cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills and started to use them with the result that in one month I was completely cured, and have been in good health ever since."

Bright's Disease is a disease of the Kidneys. Gravel and Rheumatism are caused by diseased Kidneys failing to strain impurities out of the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure them all by curing the Kidneys.

THANKSGIVING.

A visit to the market place this morning and a view of the opulent plethora of articles of produce for the use of man, would well serve as an illustration of the abundant cause we have, from a material point of view, for being thankful. Human happiness and human prosperity are relative terms and our grateful recognition of the benefits and blessings of Divine Providence can well be regulated by comparison with the lot of others, perhaps less fortunate. In Canada we have much that others have not. We have, to begin with, the best country in the world, in regard to the conditions that make for full and prosperous living, safety of person and property, freedom of opition, good laws, well administered, and all other conditions that, with ordinary thrift and foresight, bring the material means of existence, as well as the highest social, moral and religious advantages, within the reach of all. To recount all that Canadians have to be thankful for, would sound like boasting unless we make them all the subject of grateful recognition. The Government, as becomes the government of a Christian country, has set apart next Monday as a day of national thanksgiving, an action, whose effect depends upon individual and personal observance. We may chant Te Deums in our churches, but our hearts must be in tune, in sentiment as well as action, in our relations to our fellow men.

KEEP THE WELL OF JUSTICE UNDEFILED.

The Sheffield, England, Weekly Telegraph was, a day or two ago fined $1,000 for publishing an article commenting upon the Crippen murder trial—discussing a case sub judice. The London News committed a similar offence and received a similar substantial reminder of the danger of interference with the course of British justice. These instances illustrate the high character of British judicial methods. It would be fortunate if as strong ground could be taken, and with as little reserve, in regard to Canadian, and very especially, United States, methods. The contrast, in respect to the latter, is particularly strong. To illustrate it is only necessary to contrast two causes celebre, the Thaw murder trial and the Crippen murder trial. In the Thaw matter not very much less time was taken in selecting a jury than was taken in the Crippen case, in pursuing the suspected criminal across three thousand miles of sea, taking him back to London the same distance, giving him a full and fair trial and condemning him to the extreme penalty his crime deserved. Even before the Thaw jury was selected, the newspapers had tried the case, as they tried it repeatedly afterwards, with all the disgustingly filthy and lurid details featured, pictured and caricatured in the most flamboyant modes. In the Crippen case two or three newspapers that lent themselves to committing themselves in a comparatively mild and innocent manner, were punished by the imposition of heavy fines.

In connection with the treatment of Canadian criminals there are cropping up in Canada judicial conditions, incipient and actual, that suggest a contrast with the rigid uprightness and equitable dignity of British justice. Canadian newspapers have not yet come up to the enterprise of trying criminals, but, in contrast, newspapers and public sentiment are not free from more or less pertinent comments upon a growing laxity in the way of dealing with criminals. There is a growing tendency to urge unduly the insanity plea, justifiable, sometimes, as we seem to have local illustration of, but, in the main, a threatening element in the deterioration of our methods of dealing with crime. Journalistic and public opinion is not slow to express its alarm at the increasing demand for, and concession of, clemency to criminals conspicuously deserving of punishment, corresponding to the enormity of their crimes. In this we suffer from the undesirable influence of environment, and the growing lightness of the spirit of the age, the latter referable, in our case to the same influence of vicinage. We need to be on our guard against external encroachments upon the integrity of our judicial practice to the end that we may retain the well of justice undefiled.

"AGIN THE GOVERNMENT."

The Hamilton Herald says the following in the way of reproof:

When Colonel Denison of Toronto, told the Hamilton Sons of England last evening that any man who favours commercial reciprocity with the United States is a traitor to the empire, he went much too far. His statement is equivalent to a charge of treason against the Laurier Government and all its supporters. Public speakers ought to weigh the effect of their words more carefully.

This is evidently "writ sarkastic," intended for a slap at the Dominion Government of the day, which is thus reproved by the "tin-pot" loyalists and imperialists for entertaining the very idea of reciprocity with the United States. It is practically asserted that the Laurier Government is committed to reciprocity, bound to have it in any event. This is not the case. The Government is naturally desirous of any trade arrangement that will benefit the country. Their practical solicitude in this direction has been amply demonstrated. As to reciprocity, the Government is not committed to it, only committed to the international courtesy of discussing the subject with our neighbours, who are soliciting the privilege, an attitude that, in no way commits to the Government to the conclusion of a treaty; and, so far as the Government is concerned, no treaty will be listened to that does not involve terms fair to Canada, that does not distinctly promise to be an instrument in the promotion of the trade and general interests of this country. The opponents of the Government show endless ingenuity in their forms of hostility. This is the only common ground they can assume; on all other points of policy they are hopelessly divided. They are all united in being "agin the Government."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is announced that Ottawa and Montreal will have direct connection with the National Transcontinental Railway, but the construction of a connecting line along the valley of the Coulonge to the existing Grand Trunk line.

In a lengthy write-up of Western Conservative leaders, in the London Advertiser points out, the Toronto News gives half a column to Mr. Rogers and dismisses Mr. Roblin with these lines: "Mr. Roblin is a shrewd and capable leader and he is assisted by a group of acute politicians." The News damns Mr. Roblin with faint praise with a vengeance. This points, from the News' point of regard, to Mr. Rogers as the coming man and Mr. Roblin as the going man.

WHAT THE CAMPAIGN MEANS.

(Montreal Witness)

At the meetings in Drummond and Arthabaska the appeal of the nationalist speakers is not confined to the electors. It is addressed also to the mothers, sisters and wives who are present. The question which is put with impressive solemnity is this, 'Do you want to see your sons, do you want to see your brothers; do you want to see your husbands dragged off to the wars in foreign countries? If so, then vote for the Government naval bill.' This, we are told, is pressed home with all the skill of natural and trained oratory. That the farmers of Canada, whether French-speaking or English-speaking, cherish ideals of peace with the world is patently certain, and long may they continue to do so! But no one acquainted with the course of events in the world at the present time, and the deep-seated causes of international jealousies, can either doubt that explosions may yet occur, or foresee what countries may be involved. How ever anxious Canadians may be for peace, and however ardently we should as a people pursue it, the danger of war is not chimerical; and, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier has pointed out, the great development of Canada's wealth in the last few years is a factor which has to be taken into account in this connection. In the eyes of aggressive nations seeking extension, Canada is no longer a "few carpents of snow." The question of defence, therefore, national and imperial, is one of duty, and duty that cannot be overlooked. There are many people, no doubt, throughout the Dominion, east and west, to whom the necessity of the preparation for defence does not occur, and to whom no disturbances give much worry, beyond those which the constable or the policeman has to deal with. The necessity of being prepared for eventualities is by no means obvious to all. But the campaign of Mr. Bourassa, Mr. Monk and their associates more than takes advantage of the legitimate love of peace. It is a campaign of non-participation in thought, sentiment or action in imperial concerns. The result of the election in Drummond and Arthabaska, therefore, will be significant as showing how far such an attitude is likely to prevail in this province.

Strong Plea For The Saving Of York And Churchill Indians

A pleasing incident is reported to have occurred on the arrival at Port Nelson this summer of a government hydrographic survey party. When the schooner carrying the survey party got within eighteen miles of the shore she cast anchor owing to the danger with which further progress would be attended by reason of shoals and the absence of charts. After the schooner had lain at anchor for a couple of weeks an old Indian offered to pilot her in. Although operated only by sails and although there were no buoys or other channel indications the schooner was brought safely into the mouth of the Nelson and anchored at a point near which it is proposed to build a breakwater.

This story has all the appearance of truth, for the navigation of the Hudson Bay coast boats, which sail regularly throughout the summer between York and Churchill, is entirely in the hands of Indians and half-breeds. These men are expert sailors as were their fathers and grandfathers before them. The lives of white men are constantly entrusted to them not to speak of valuable cargoes.

The present moment is a fateful one for the York and Churchill Indians and for all those living in the great area to the north of Manitoba, in this region, practically untouched by the white man, are now living some 6,000 Indians and halfbreeds. They have surrendered their country to the Dominion Government, though morally it is still theirs by effective occupation. They hunt and fish all over the region and derive from it a varying measure of material prosperity. The Hudson Bay Co., and all white men travelling through the north are, at present, absolutely dependent on their skill and knowledge as canoemen and guides and upon their strength and endurance in carrying heavy burdens over the countless portages.

In the light of the past one trembles to think what will become of these splendid fellows if white men in any number get into the country. But with the building of the Hudson Bay Railway and the exploitation of the natural wealth of the country, other than fur, the region which will soon be a portion of the province of Manitoba is bound to come more and more under the control of white men. It is time now to concern ourselves with the future of our Indian wards. Considerations of humanity call for it and indeed demand it. Before the play of great silent forces we may no doubt be impotent, but happily what we know of these same forces encourages us to believe that the Indian, if instructed and protected as it is the duty of white men to instruct and protect them, may be maintained as useful members of society.

Obviously there is much that we can do, though it may entail extra expenditure by the department of Indian affairs. We can co-operate to a much greater extent with the churches in the teaching of Indian children, this teaching can, doubtless be conducted along more practical and common-sense lines. We can elevate the Indian service by employing as Indian agents and inspectors only men of the highest character, whose lives furnish some guarantee of an understanding of and a sympathy with the Indians. Happily the department has secured the services of many such men, but there is room for more in the service.

Above all, we can keep intoxicating liquor out of the new territory. At whatever cost for police or magistracy, intoxicating liquor must be kept out of the region through which the railway passes. The provisions with regard to the entry of liquor beyond places like The Pass and Norway House should be revised and enforced to the very letter. If necessary punishments should be made more severe. The Mounted Police have done excellent work in this respect, but it would be possible, even now, to strengthen their hands. In recent years Indian chiefs in the north have complained to government representatives that intoxicating liquor was supplied to members of their bands and have begged the assistance of the government in keeping out the "fire water." If this happen with only a sprinkling of white men in the country, what is going to take place when the number is multiplied by ten, fifty or one hundred?

It will be to the lasting disgrace of Canada if she allows the 6,000 Indians and halfbreeds between Lake Winnipeg and Hudson Bay to be demoralized and decimated as other Indian tribes have been demoralized and decimated. They deserve a better fate. Speaking only the other day of the Indians of Norway House, the Rev. John McDougall had the following to say: "They are as noble and worthy people as I have ever known; faithful and true, steadfast to the mission, to the Hudson Bay Company and to the government."

OLD DAYS ON SCUGOG RIVER

A few days ago a writer in the Lindsay Post gave a very interesting account of early navigation on Scugog River and Scugog Lake, and referred also to the large excursion trade that was once carried on out of Lindsay to points on Sturgeon Lake. Referring to the way in which this trade has been lost to Lindsay, the writer says:

The writer remembers, when a boy, of seeing Scugog River dotted with steamers of various sizes, all busily engaged running up and down the river. The depletion of the timber limits, and the disappearance of saw mills, and advent of the iron horse has brought about quite a change, it is true, but Lindsay in those days was the Mecca of hundreds of excursionists, because Sturgeon Point had a provincial reputation as a summer resort. We remember seeing every week an excursion or two coming to Lindsay over the Whitby, Port Perry or old Midland line, and the Vanderbilt would be loaded down with human freight. Finally conditions changed at Sturgeon Point. Lindsay allowed herself to lose the excursion trade, boat owners found it a hard matter to run a boat with profit, and to-day we are without a steamboat capable of carrying passengers.

Other towns have taken advantage of our indifference and each summer we have the spectacle presented to us of excursions passing right through our town to other centres. Why? Simply because they realize there is something in the excursion trade, and reach out for it.

Lindsay had one or two good excursions last year. One came by rail per C.P.R., and the people were obliged to plod through mill yards, across switches and over logs to reach the steamer Otonabee. And why? Simply because the boat was prevented from coming closer to town owing to obstructions in the river. Boat owners know too well the dangerous condition of the river from sunken logs, and the owners of excursion boats are thinking seriously of cancelling all future trips to this port until conditions are improved.

There may be some who think that excursions are of no benefit to a town—that people come and go and leave very little money behind. This is not the case. Ask Orillia, Peterboro, Cobourg, Port Hope, and other towns why they get out after the excursion trade, and they will reply because it is good business, and the merchants reap the benefit.

Lindsay has lost a good deal of this trade, and the fault rests with the people themselves. It is no use in crying over spilled milk, but we believe an effort should be made by our council and Board of Trade to try and attract excursions to our town. There has been altogether too much indifference manifested in this matter in the past.

The argument may be advanced that we have no resort adjacent for excursionists to visit. Sturgeon Point is not open to excursionists as it was years ago, it will be argued, but there is no reason why we should not have such a place. Surely our people can be just as enterprising as those of other towns; and if this enterprise was brought into play, we would have a picnic resort somewhere on Sturgeon Lake.

Now, it has been said that an excursion boat will not pay on the local waters. No, not as long as our people remain apathetic and make no effort to boom these waters. Grist will not come to your mill unless you get out and hustle after it, and we firmly believe that if a boat of this kind was placed on the river, and an effort made to induce excursions to visit Lindsay, the proposition would be a paying one.

Then there is the condition of our river at present. Our council and Board of Trade might take up this question and consider it seriously. As stated above, the channel needs cleaning out badly if boats are to navigate with any degree of safety in the future. How is this to be accomplished? Let our Board of Trade and council get together and send a deputation to Ottawa to urge upon the government the necessity of improving navigation on this section of the Trent Valley Canal. Let the deputation be a representative one, and let Port Perry and the other municipalities on the upper stretch join hands in making known to the government their needs. We have no hesitation in saying that if this matter is properly handled, the government will favorably consider the request. There must be joint action. Mistakes have been made in the past in not urging this matter with more vigor, but we can profit by this and take action at once. It is a live question.

APPLES SCARCE

Not many years have apples been as scarce as they are this fall.

No authority has as yet solved the question as to why there are fewer apples this year. Some say there is a decrease in the average grown. Others say "Off Season" or some other equally plausible excuse.

While there are probably fewer apples, yet the quality in many districts is vastly improved. This statement is made by the Director of Fruit Experimental Stations, P. W. Hodgetts, who is also secretary of the Ontario Horticultural Exhibition. Mr. Hodgetts assures us that there will be an exceptionally fine lot of fruit at this year's Exhibition. Some counties alone will send as many as 2000 barrels of apples.

It is rather surprising that in seven years this Exhibition has become known throughout America as the one place where a person can see perfect fruit in abundance. The Railway Companies have recognized its importance, by granting single fare rates to Toronto from all stations east of Port Arthur.

The dates of this year's Exhibition are from Nov. 12th to 19th. Thousands of persons from all points in Eastern Canada visit Toronto each year to see the best Canada produces in Fruit, Flower and Honey.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Watrous

The geographical centre of the great and growing Canadian West—The centre of the finest farming section in all Saskatchewan—The most attractive town of this new Golden Empire—The Central Divisional Point of the Great Western Provinces on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—In direct line between Regina and Prince Albert, and will be on the line of railway when built between these two cities—The terminus of the branch line of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Prince Albert. :: :: :: ::

HOW MANY LOTS IN WATROUS DO YOU WANT?

Are YOU going to purchase some lots in Watrous and take advantage of the big increase in value which is practically sure to take place in this live and growing city in the next two or three years? Or are you going to procrastinate—hesitate—put off the matter until later on?

The money YOU make in Watrous will be through the ownership of lots you ACTUALLY PURCHASE, and not on the lots which you INTEND TO PURCHASE. Remember, "He who hesitates works for the other fellow."

Later on, when Watrous is one of the important and rapidly growing cities of Western Canada, and real estate which is close in commands high and constantly increasing prices will YOU then be pointed out as one of those who took advantage of a live opportunity, or will you be one of those who lament their condition and discuss what "might have been"?

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these—it might have been."

Will the opportunity now presented in a couple of years when lots in Watrous command high prices, be to you like "water that has passed over the mill-dam"?

You cannot make a mistake if you buy lots in Watrous. It is a Central Divisonal Point on a great Transcontinental line of railway, surrounded by rich agricultural territory and located near the banks of Little Manitou Lake, which will bring tourists by the thousand to Watrous to avail themselves of the benefits afforded by this wonderful medicinal water.

Being a Divisional Point on a great line of railway is usually alone sufficient to make a city of considerable importance, but Watrous, on account of its natural advantages and strategic position, would be an important inland city, even if it were not a Divisional Point.

An investment of real estate in Watrous offers a splendid opportunity for large and certain profits. And no line of investment during the last few years has been so safe and shown greater returns than an investment in lots in the rapidly growing cities of Western Canada.

History DOES repeat itself, and it is usually safe to judge the future by the past. Therefore, it will be well for you to ponder over this fact: The C. P. R. was the first of the great Transcontinental lines of railway.

Suppose you had purchased a few years ago lots close in at $100 in any of the Western Divisional Points on the C. P. R., your investment would have been safe and certain right from the start, and it would have been constantly and rapidly increasing in value.

Note the Divisional Points on the main line of the C. P. R. running west from Winnipeg, Brandon, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Revelstoke. If you had purchased lots in any or all of these Divisional Points when conditions were similar to those in Watrous to-day—when these young cities were about two years old, had a population of 1,500, and choice inside lots could be purchased at $100 each—there could be no doubt about the wisdom of your investment, which would likely be worth to-day not less than $10 for each dollar you invested. This opportunity, however, was presented a few years ago, but is now a thing of the past.

You now have the same opportunity in Watrous that was presented in these Divisional Point cities on the C. P. R. The Grand Trunk Pacific is the latest and destined to become the greatest of all the Transcontinental lines. Traversing as it does a great and rich territory, there can be no doubt that the Divisional points on the G. T. P., will in a few years be cities of equal size and importance with those on the C. P. R.

But let us carry this comparison a little further. Of the Great Western Provinces, Moose Jaw is the Central Division on the C. P. R., while Watrous is the Central Divisional Point on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Moose Jaw is now a city of 16,000 population and growing rapidly. It is but a few years since Moose Jaw was no larger than Watrous is to-day, and choice lots, close in, could have been purchased for $100 each. However, lots which sold in Moose Jaw a few years ago at $100 are to-day worth from $1,000 to $3,000, and they are advancing in price rapidly, just as the price of lots is advancing in practically all of the Western Canadian Cities.

You can buy lots to-day in Watrous, close in, splendidly located, for $100, and in five years these lots in Watrous should be worth at least as much as the same kind of lots in Moose Jaw to-day.

The "Ten Thousand Club" of Watrous is made up of the leading business men, and it is their ambition for Watrous to have 10,000 population by 1914. With a population of 10,000 in Watrous, lots which we are offering to-day for $100, will easily be worth $1,000.

$100,000,000 WAS MADE LAST YEAR

By Those Who Own Property in the Live and Growing Cities of Western Canada

WHAT PORTION OF THIS DID YOU MAKE?

From the most accurate figures obtainable, it is found that the assessed valuation of real estate in the live and growing cities of Western Canada last year increased more than $100,000,000. That does not include improvements, but the actual increase in value of real estate in these cities. The Winnipeg Free Press securing its figures from "records which have been gathered directly from original sources," finds that in eight Western Canadian cities the increase in real estate values of land alone, and not improvements, for the past five years has averaged 562 per cent, or an average annual increase of 112 per cent. for each of these cities during the past five years.

What Do These Figures Indicate? They indicate that an investment in the live and growing cities of Western Canada is as safe and sure as anything can be, and that your investment is almost certain to make you 100 per cent. profit each year.

What Does This Mean To You? It means nothing unless you participate in the profits, and you can do this only by buying real estate in these young and vigorous Western Canadian cities. The time to buy is when a new city has passed through the "seasoning" stage—when it is in the formative period—when its natural resources and strategical position assure the building of a big city along broad lines.

Watrous has all the natural advantages that any new city could wish, and, in addition, is destined to be one of the most popular health resorts in America.

Little Manitou Lake—"The Carlsbad of Canada"

THE WINNIPEG TELEGRAM, speaking editorially of Watrous and its wonderful mineral lake, has the following:

"Little Lake Manitou, on the G. T. P., is beginning to receive the attention to which the wonderful medicinal properties of the lake so well entitle it. The Indians called the lake Manitou, which means 'good spirit,' owing to the healing qualities they found the waters possessed. It is said that Indians came to this lake from hundreds of miles round, and on the shores are still to be seen circles of stones, which mark Indian encampments. Though it is probable that the Indians for years have availed themselves of the curative powers of the waters of this lake, it was not until the building of the G. T. P. had caused the town of Watrous to spring into being two years ago that the remarkable medicinal value of the waters of the lake began to be generally realized.

"The power of these waters to cure rheumatism, eczema and skin diseases has been so positively and strikingly demonstrated as to attract considerable interest. Those who visit the lake are unanimous in declaring Little Manitou Lake as the coming Carlsbad of Canada. A chemical analysis of the waters of Little Lake Manitou shows considerable resemblance to the medicinal waters of the world-famous Carlsbad, which has for so long maintained the highest reputation. The beneficial results obtained from bathing in Little Lake Manitou are so positive that the good effect is beyond doubt.

What the Hon. Wm. Pugsley Says:

"Hon. William Pugsley, Minister of Public Works for the Dominion of Canada, hearing of the fame of the lake, paid it a visit and bathed in its waters. The honourable gentleman, when interviewed at Watrous by one of our reporters stated: 'I am not an authority on the medicinal properties of water, but this I can say, Bathing in Little Lake Manitou is particularly pleasant; there is a property about the water that imparts a pleasant glow. I am somewhat troubled with rheumatism, and I am quite certain bathing in Little Lake Manitou has been very beneficial to me.'

"'I consider Watrous has a good future; the lake is a valuable asset to Saskatchewan and it will become a resort patronised not only by many from all parts of this country, but also from points in the United States. I have visited health resorts in California and England. Little Lake Manitou is unique.'

"'Yes, it is true we bought four lots on the shores of Little Lake Manitou; my brother (Dr. P. A. Pugsley) intends to take treatment here for rheumatism from which he suffers.'

Where Anyone Can Swim.

"The specific gravity of the water of Little Manitou Lake is 1.06. This is .04 heavier than the waters of Carlsbad. The human body cannot sink in water of this specific gravity. People who elsewhere have given up all hope of swimming find it easy to swim in Lake Manitou."—From the Winnipeg Telegram, July 30, 1910.

Buy Lots in Watrous and Make Money

The more lots you buy in Watrous, the more money you will make. It is impossible to purchase lots in a growing young city of Western Canada and not make splendid and certain profits.

Lots in Moose Jaw that sold few years ago at $100 each are to-day worth from $1,000 to $3,000.

Lethbridge a few years ago was a small frontier town. Lots in Lethbridge now command fancy prices, $10,000 to $12,000 is sometimes paid for a single lot.

Lots which sold in Saskatoon ten years ago for $100 a-piece to-day worth ten to fifty times that amount.

You could have purchased lots in Edmonton ten years ago for $100, which are to-day worth $1,000 to $10,000.

Those who purchased lots in Edmonton ten years ago are now possessors of property worth 1,000 per cent. more than the price at which it was originally purchased—an average increase in value of 100 per cent. each year.

In Fort William the same rapid advance in values has taken place. Lots which sold at $100 to $200, even five years ago, have since sold for $1,000 to $2,000.

It is almost impossible to chronicle the rapid advance in property in Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities of Western Canada.

Buy lots in Watrous now while they are selling at the ground floor prices, and hold them, and you are certain to make money. Buy half a dozen or more lots and ride with the wave of advancing values; $10 for every dollar you invest is common in live towns of Western Canada.

Think what it means for the population of Canada to increase from six millions to thirty millions, and 80 per cent. of this growth will be in the West. There is no use in time in a day of land and opportunity unless you are part of it. You doubtless have among your friends and acquaintances those who have shown their faith in Canada and the Canadian cities, and have become rich because they invested when these cities were young.

Buy lots and prosper with Canada. Buy in Watrous, and as Watrous grows the money you put into it will grow just as surely and certainly. Invest your money where the greatest activity is taking place, in the centre of rapid growth, where the greatest advances are realized. This centre is undoubtedly in Western Canada, and Watrous is the pivotal point. You are taking no chances when you buy lots in Watrous at present prices. The future of Watrous is assured.

To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Hamlet, Act I., Sc. 2.

To thine own self be true! What does Shakespeare mean by this statement? It is not easy to define this use of self. Selves are of various kinds. There are savage selves and gentle selves, vain selves and modest selves; foolish selves and wise selves. It is scarcely character, for characters are good or bad. No one would wish a man who had a brutal self to be true to his character. Richard III. and Iago were consistent true to themselves, but they are not subjects for admiration.

In every individual there is an inner voice prompting him to act rightly. On the other hand there are external. On the other hand there are ternal voices, the world and the flesh, suggesting unrighteous action. It is that inner voice, conscience, that Shakespeare refers to when he makes Polonius say to Laertes:

"To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day;
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

It may be urged that there are souls utterly depraved, who from their infancy have followed evil. Physically deformed creatures are born into the world; mental idiots are not uncommon, and so there may be moral idiots. But these are rare indeed! The being is of exceedingly low type who has not felt at some time a pricking of conscience. However, it is the normal and not the abnormal man that we have to deal with. Mental and moral idiots should be shut up in a madhouse; each is a recognized menace to society.

Richard III. was apparently a devil incarnate. He is portrayed as a conscienceless villain. He had with malice aforethought "determined to prove the villain." He could "smile and murder" while he smiled. As his character is studied through the plays in which he appears there seems to be no redeeming trait. He is a brutal, self-confessed villain, taking pride in his villainy. He perished, but not before the student of his life has clearest evidence that this devil in human form had in him an angel voice prompting to better things. On the night before his death on Bosworth Field, his long dormant conscience speaks to him, his better self chides him with scorpion sting: "My conscience has a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain."

Richard has been false to all men because he has never listened to the voice of his better self.

It is the duty of each individual man and woman to study self,—to turn eyes inward. So much are people concerned with the external world that they forget that there is a world more difficult of comprehension, of vaster importance within their own hearts. "Know thyself" said the philosopher. That is not sufficient unless it be with a practical knowledge, a knowledge that leads to action. Shakespeare has earned for himself the right to be called the greatest of social philosophers, the wisest teacher of ethics. The beauty of his teaching is in its simplicity; obey the voice of conscience, listen to the Infinite speaking to your finite heart. A man true to his ideal self cannot be false to any man. But it is necessary to be eternally on guard. Selfishness is at work in every life. The rights of others are too often ignored. Nations and individuals selfishly seek their own advantage. It is common is this that it would sometimes seem the only way to success, from a worldly point of view, is in self-seeking. There is no true happiness in mere possession. What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

Being true to self does not signify that a man should be careless of his opportunities. There is no higher or better impulse in men than that towards possession. But of two things the seeker after wealth must be careful; first, that he respect the possessions of others; and, secondly, that having achieved distinction or material wealth he use his power and wealth for the betterment of society. His true self prompts him to do his; his baser self urges him to seek self-enjoyment. Any man knows that it is better to give than to receive. Why is this? The giving is prompted by the inner voice—the Infinite in man. It is the citizen-voice speaking to the individual. A man's duty towards his fellow-man is to render a helping hand. It is not always easy to obey this divine inner voice. It may cause the loss of property, the loss of so-called friends. The wealth that can only be won by falseness is not worth possessing; the friends that can only be held by double-dealing were better in the ranks of the enemy. A clear conscience and an untainted heart are godlike possessions. The heaven of righteousness in the world is the men who are true to themselves, who through self-knowledge and self-respect are incapable of being false to any man.

Dandruff Causes Falling Hair and Baldness

Baldness and Itching Scalp Are Caused by Microbes

There is no doubt about it. Doctor Sabourand proved it when he infected a guinea pig with dandruff germs and all its hair disappeared in a short time. The entire medical world has accepted Dr. Sabourand's discovery as final. Ask any worthy physician.

Paris leads the world in knowledge of diseases of the hair and remedies for the same.

And Parisian Sage which can now be obtained at leading druggists all over Canada is the one great remedy that kills the dandruff germs.

And that is why Wm. Madill says to every reader of the Examiner, if Parisian Sage does not banish dandruff, stop falling hair or itching scalp in two weeks he will refund the purchase price.

Dandruff is the forerunner of baldness. Take care of your hair while you have hair to take care of. Kill the dandruff germs now before the dandruff germs kill your hair.

Use Parisian Sage, the guaranteed dandruff cure and delightful hair dressing.

It is used extensively by ladies of refinement because it keeps the scalp absolutely clean and gives a bewitching lustre to the hair. Price 50 cents at Wm. Madill's and leading druggists everywhere. Girl with auburn hair on every package. Made in Canada by Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont. Mail orders filled, all charges prepaid.

"I was told of your great remedy, Parisian Sage, that it would grow hair on bald heads, so I got a bottle and tried it, and it is fine. I am a young man, and only 25, and was completely bald on the top of my head, and now I have hair an inch long, with the use of only one bottle. I shall certainly keep on using it until I have a good head of hair, which I have no no doubt it will bring." Oscar Armstrong, engineer, Belleville Horseshoe and Rolling Mill Co., Belleville, Ont., Aug. 21, 1909.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Closing the Doors.

I have closed the doors on Doubt;
I will go by what light I can find.
And hold up my hands, and reach them out
To the glimmer of God in the dark, and call;
"I am Thine, though I grope and stumble and fall,
I serve; and Thy service is kind."

I have closed the door on Fear
He has lived with me far too long.
If he were to break forth and reappear,
I should lift my eyes and look at the sky,
And sing aloud, and run lightly by;
He will never follow a song.

I have closed the door on Gloom.
I must seek for my soul a wider room
With windows to open and let in the sun,
And radiant lamps when the day is done,
And the breeze of the world blowing through.

—Irene P. McKeehan, in The Century Magazine.

The best manner of putting on gloves is to open and turn back the gloves to the thumb and powder lightly. Put the fingers in their places, not the thumb and carefully work them on with the first finger and thumb of the other hands until they are quite down; never press between the fingers.

Pass the thumb into its place with care and work on with the fingers; turn back the glove and slide it over the hand and wrist never pinching the kid, and work the glove into proper place by means of the lightest pressure, always allowing the kid to slide between the fingers. In finishing, care should be taken in fastening the first button.

When Turning a Hem.

When turning a hem or measuring a skirt to straighten it at the bottom a dressmaker of my acquaintance saves herself time and nervous strain by marking the place she wants on the tape measure with a small paper clip—one of the kinds that "stay put." Then she does not have to search out her desired mark every time she puts a pin in the skirt, but feels automatically for the clip.

In turning a three-inch hem, for instance, she will put the clip at three, and for all practical purposes have with her a three-inch tape measure.

How to Eat a Raw Egg

Break the yolk of an egg into a dish with a teaspoonful of white sugar and a teaspoonful of orange or lemon juice and beat lightly together with a fork. Put the white on a plate and add a pinch of salt. Then with a broad bladed knife beat it to a stiff broth. Now, as lightly as possible, mix all together in the dish. Transfer it to a tumbler, which it will nearly fill if it is properly prepared. Any fruit juice may be used in place of the lemon or orange.

Paints and Dyeing.

If your dress accessories do not quite match your gown, or you wish that gown itself a slightly different shade, try painting with oil colours and gasoline. The effect is marvellous and the slight odour soon goes off. Kid slippers can thus be made to match exactly any costume.

A spot on linen can be painted with water colours to match the clean material, as the paint sinks into the linen without changing its texture. It rubs off, however, and must be renewed every five or six months.

Keeping Sheets Dry.

Dampness is bad for bed linen. Few housekeepers think that damp sheets are as injurious in summer as in winter.

Insist upon sheets being ironed dry, and if uncertain that your commands are obeyed have a responsible person examine them before they are made up in the bed. If there is the least dampness, air them for half an hour or an hour.

An elderly person whose vitality is low may get rheumatism or dangerous colds from the least dampness of sheets. It is a wise precaution to put a hot water bag in the bed for a few minutes before retiring time. This is most necessary the first time after sheets are changed.

To Stop Doors Rattling.

To properly adjust a door which rattles on windy nights requires time, tools and patience, with possibly some paint to finish off; but the following method is quick, easy, and equally effective: Materials — two or three small corks, chemist's size, a penknife and seccotine or equivalent. Examine door outside when latched and see what space there is between it and that heading. Select your place cut a little "cheese" off the cork rather thicker than space available, seccotine one face of it, stick it on the heading, shut the door o nit, and leave to dry. No more rattling and the cork keeps its elasticity indefinitely.

Suggestions For the Cook.

Into one and a half cups of lukewarm water stir two teaspoonfuls of melted butter, a teaspoonful each of sugar and salt and half a yeast cake. Stir until all are dissolved and add enough sifted flour to make a thin dough or a stiff batter. Set to rise. When light beat very hard and stir in gradually enough milk to make of the proper consistency for pouring, but take care not to have the butter too thin. Lay greased muffin rings on a slightly greased griddle and pour into these, having the mixture come less than halfway up the inside of the ring. Cook until browned on one side, but do not brown on the other. The upper side should be done, but white and porous. Butter generously and serve hot.

Hot Chocolate Sauce.

Put into a granite saucepan a cup of sugar and one of water, and boil without stirring for three minutes. Dissolve a heaping teaspoonful of arrow-root in a gill of cold water and dissolve four tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate in a gill of cold milk. Stir chocolate and arrowroot together and beat them into the boiling syrup. Cook for three minutes and flavor with vanilla and a dash of cinnamon. Serve with ice cream.

Huckleberry Cake

One cup of sugar rubbed into half-cup of butter. When very smooth add two well beaten eggs a teaspoonful of vanilla, a dash of nutmeg, two cups of flour sifted three times with two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and last of all, a pint of huckleberries dredged with flour. Bake in a loaf tin. This is very fine.

A LUMBERMAN'S BACKACHE

"The pains in my back were dreadful and the kidneys failed to do their work," writes Mr. I. J. McKinnon, Orillia, Ont. "Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills proved to be exactly what I needed, brought relief promptly and cured me. Sorry I wasted time experimenting with other medicines.

INDIAN AGENTS MAKE THEIR ANNUAL REPORTS

The annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ending March 31, 1910, has just been published, and it gives some very interesting information concerning the Indian tribes of Canada. The reports from the agents of the bands in this locality are as follows:

MISSISSAGUAS OF RICE LAKE

Reserve.—Rice Lake reserve is located on the north shore of Rice Lake, in the township of Otonabee, county of Peterborough. It contains about 1,960 acres, of which about 855 is cleared; 130 acres of this is under lease to white tenants, while the locatees cultivate the remiander of said cleared land.

Population.—The total population shown by the present census is 95

Health and Sanitation.—The health of this band has been very good. During the past year there have been no epidemics of any kind.

Occupations.—In the spring of the year a few of the Indians spend all their time trapping, and during the summer months act as guides for the tourists. A few of the young men hire with the farmers for the summer months, while other members of the band remain at home and cultivate their land.

Buildings.—The buildings here are all frame, with the exception of one brick dwelling. With a few exceptions, the Indian women are clean and very good housekeepers.

Stock.—These Indians have considerable stock; some very good horses, cattle and hogs.

Farm Implements.—All implements necessary for farming are used on this reserve.

Characteristics and Progress.—These Indians are making some progress improving their buildings and farms each year. Plenty of hay and grain was retained by them to bring their stock through the winter fairly well. On the whole, year by year, they are getting more industrious, law abiding and better off.

Temperance and Morality.—There are some who will take liquor at every opportunity, but some of them are strictly temperate.

MISSISSAGUAS OF MUD LAKE

Reserve.—This reserve is located on the shore of Mud Lake, in the township of Smith, county of Peterborough. It contains about 2,000 acres, of which over 300 is cleared.

Population.—The total population shown by the present census is 193.

Health and Sanitation.—There has been very little sickness during the year, and as a result very few deaths. A good many of thehomes are very clean and tidy.

Occupations.—There are some who attend to their farms and are making very steady improvement in agriculture. Others spend some time in the spring in trapping, and then the summer months with tourists.

Buildings.—All the dwellings here are of frame and log, with the exception of one. These Indians have also a very pretty hall and church, which are of brick.

Stock.—These Indians have considerable stock, some very good horses, cattle and hogs.

Farm Implements.—Those working their land are well supplied with modern farm implements, and take very good care of what they have.

Characteristics and Progress.—There are a few making some progress, improving their buildings and farms each year. On the whole, year by year, they are getting more industrious, law-abiding and better off.

Temperance and Morality.—A large majority of the band are temperate; some, however, are inclined to drink, very much so. I am sorry to say.

WM. McFARLANE, Indian Agent.

MISSISSAGUAS OF SCUGOG

Sir,—I have the honour to submit my annual report and statistical statement for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1910.

Tribe.—All the Indians of this tribe.

Reserve.—The reserve is situated on the northern portion of Scugog island, in Lake Scugog, about 8 miles from Port Perry, Ontario county.

Population.—The total population is 34. There was one marriage during the year.

Health and Sanitation.—The health of the Indians is generally good, and their homes and premises are kept clean and tidy.

Occupation.—Hunting and fishing are the chief occupations of the older members; the young men hire out as farm hands, and the women engage in making baskets. If they could be induced to pay more attention to agriculture, better results would follow, as their lands are of the best and good prices prevail for all kinds of farm produce.

Buildings.—The buildings are all good and new or lately remodelled.

Stock and Farm Implements.—The quality and quantity of stock do not improve much, as very little farming is carried on. The implements are good, but not properly cared for.

Characteristics and Progress.—The young men are industrious, law abiding and willing to work; still, not good managers for themselves.

Temperance.—Occasionally an older member of the band will indulge in intemperance, but the young men are quite temperate in their habits.

A. W. WILLIAMS, Indian Agent.

MISSISSAGUAS OF ALNWICK

Sir,—I beg to submit my annual report and statistical statement in connection with the Indians named above for the year ended March 31, 1910.

Reserve.—This reserve is in the township of Alnwick, in the county of Northumberland, and province of Ontario, and contains 3,536.58 acres, including Sugar Island in Rice Lake. There are over 1,800 acres of this reserve rented to whitemen, and the sum of $1,849.49 was collected for rents during last year; the remaining cleared parts are worked and pastured by the locatees. This reserve is well adapted for farming purposes, as little of it is swampy or too wet to work.

Vital Statistics.—The population is now 259, being an increase of 5 over last year. We had 14 births and 3 women were married into the band from outside, we had 9 deaths, 2 became enfranchised, and 1 man lost membership owing to residence in the United States for more than five years.

Health.—The health of the members of the band is at present good; I do not know of one case of sickness.

Occupations.—Nine families are farming and on the whole are doing fairly well, selling cattle, fat hogs, milk to cheese factories, eggs, butter and grain; and a number of the members earn good wages working for farmers and on the rivers driving saw logs and working in the lumber camps in the winter season. The amount earned in wages during the year was $8,864. Little is made from fishing, hunting or trapping.

Buildings.—The buildings are neatly frame and in general very well kept. Most of the Indian women are clean and keep their houses clean and tidy and will compare very well with the white women in their neighborhood.

Farm Implements.—The machinery used by those farming is in every way up-to-date.

Progress.—The Indians are improving their holdings every year by building good fences and the reserve on the whole is very well fenced.

Temperance.—Some of the younger men will take liquor whenever they can get it; yet some of the young men will not taste it nor will very few of the older men.

J. HACKERAY, Indian Agent.

He has just returned to America and will be heartily welcomed to Peterborough. The topic of the Address will be "The Women of India". Mrs. Smith and two children born in India will be present and take part.

"ORANGE LILY SAVED MY LIFE"

These words or expressions having the same meaning are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors and ulcers had been removed by the action of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles known in general as Women's Disorders, Orange Lily furnishes a positive scientific, never-failing cure. It is applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a box, worth 25c., sufficient for ten days' treatment, to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 3 stamps. PRESENTATION OF PRIZES TOOK PLACE AT CONVENT CONCERT

Delightful Entertainment at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum Last Evening---A Splendidly Rendered Programme---An Operetta by the Young People.

The large crowd that assembled in St. Alphonsus Lyceum last evening apparently were more delighted with the excellent programme presented by the music class of St. Mary's Convent. It was a concert of the highest orde and too much credit cannot be given the sisters in charge for the splendid manner in which the various performers carried out their respective parts. The distribution of prizes won at the recent midsummer examinations was also made, the presentations being mare by His Lordship the Bishop, Rev. Father McColl, and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick. Probably the chief feature of the evening's ntertainment was the presenting of an operetta, "Jack the Giant Killer," by a number of young people, who did excedingly well in the portrayal of their several parts.

The programme was as follows:

PART FIRST

1. Inst.—"Amorita Valse," Le Barge
   Violins—E. Derris, K. McCarthy, V. McCabe, W. Hatrick.
   Mandolines—E. McCabe, L. Hatrick, M. O'Toole. Piano—A. Sullivan.

UNIQUE CHILDREN'S GATHERING ARRANGED FOR THE MORNING OF THANKSGIVING DAY

The Thanksgiving service of the Sunday Schools of Peterborough promises to be one of the most conspicuous gatherings that has ever been seen in our city. This is the first time that any gathering including every Sunday School in the city has been arranged.

The Schools in the South end and Ashburnham will leave their respective churches at 9.30 o'clock, sharp and will come in a body by way of George Street and will be joined by the Schools located farther north. The procession will continue to George Street Methodist Church where the service will commence promptly at ten o'clock. Music by an orchestra and the united Sunday Schools and two ten minute address will complete the programme and the great congregation will be dismissed at a quarter to eleven o'clock. An offering will be taken to defray necessary expenses.

The teachers and officers of the various Schools are asked to accompany the pupils and parents and friends will be admitted until the building is filled to its capacity.

This is not merely a children's gathering and all the Adult classes are expected to be present. This is surely a fitting service for the morning of Thanksgiving Day.

Missionary Pigs were Slaughtered With Successful Results

A pleasant affair took place in the parlours of the Park Street Baptist Church.

The annual meeting of the Mission Band was held last night and was a very successful event.

During the year Missionary pigs were given to the members of the Band, to fatten, and they did their work well.

All the pigs had been fed fairly well and when killed, without a squeal by Mr H Reid and Rev. W. C. Riddiford, their internals produced something over fifteen dollars.

This with the collection and a few more pigs yet to be killed, will bring the Missionary Offering up to twenty-five dollars, which will go for the support of a native-worker in India.

The chair was occupied by the pastor, Rev. W. C. Riddiford. During the evening, Miss Ethel Hill sang a solo and Mrs. H. Ellis gave a most interesting address. Miss Bessie Gillespie, the President and Miss Ethel Eacheson are to be congratulated upon the success of the past year.

Refreshments were served at the close.

Decided Decline In Prices Of Hog Products In The British Market

The following extract from the Trade Bulletin of Friday, October 28, will be of great interest to farmers and consumers of hog products.

Our cables to-day from London quote Canadian Bacon 6s to 67s with a demoralized market which is a decline of 3s to 5s from last week, and shows a steep drop of about 20s per cwt. from the highest point some time since. Canadian bacon in England and on the way there shows a heavy loss. Hogs in this market are lower at $7.50 to $7.75 live weight, but in Chicago they are quoted a little higher at $7.90 to $8.40 under very light receipts, which are all wanted for the home trade, chiefly in fresh meat. A singular feature in the Chicago market is that whilst the present prices of hogs range from $7.90 to $8.40, the May quotation for live hogs is $6.00 per 100 lbs. From this it would seem that prices will come down with a run, as farmers are now putting their cheap corn into hogs as well as pork, lard, hams and bacon. Cash lard now selling at $13.25 in Chicago is offered at $9.80 for May. Canadian bacon selling in London to-day at 67s cost packers 72s to lay it down there. . .

It might be added that within the past two days, bacon has declined in price 60 shillings per 112 lbs. as will be seen by the daily cable of the Geo. Matthews Company, Peterborough, of Oct. 29th, which reads as follows:

Danish bacon is selling at 60s to 62s. Holders cannot clear. Market remains without improvement.

WHY SALVES FAIL TO CURE ECZEMA

Scientists are now agreed that the eczema germs are lodged not in the outer skin or epidermis, but in the inner skin. Hence, a penetrating liquid is required, not an outward salve that clogs the pores.

We recommend to all eczema patients the standard prescription Oil of Wintergreen as compounded in liquid form known as D. D. D. Prescription. A trial bottle of this D. D. D. Prescription will instantly relieve the itch. Write the D. D. D. Laboratories, Dept. P.E., 49 Colborne street, Toronto, for this free trial bottle. We have sold and recommended this remedy for years, and know of wonderful cures from its use. We recommend it to our patrons. McDermid and Jury, druggists; also Payne's drug store.

Hunting Parties And Where They Will Spend The Next Two Weeks

Tuesday next is the opening of the deer shooting season and already several parties from this city have left for their hunting grounds, while some others are preparing to leave this evening and Monday morning. There were some who went yesterday and more left town this morning. They will arrive at their homes for the next two weeks in plenty of time to have become settled and have a rest after their long drive before the real day arrives. But when Tuesday does come they will be out bright and early on that morning, ready to down the first antlered monarch that comes into view. If the weather does not get too warm again it will be ideal for hunting deer.

COULD HAVE GONE FARTHER

They Had Eight Bags of Ballast Left But Were Afraid to Go Further Into the Wilds For Fear of Starving to Death — Made Hard Journey Through a Rough District—Trappers Helped Them.

Montreal, Oct. 29. Hawley and Post of the American II. reached Montreal yesterday. Both are in excellent health and spirits, notwithstanding their strenuous experiences of the last ten days.

The aeronauts have made a careful chart of their entire trip, with altitudes and temperature, etc., taken every hour, and sometimes oftener. Their greatest altitude was 16,600 feet, which was when they shot up in the northern wilderness about noon on Wednesday, the last day of their flight in search of a landing-place.

At 10 a.m. on Wednesday, says the log, the balloon was up 11,000 feet, and at noon 16,000. The temperature was 18. A landing was effected at 3.45 half a mile from a small lake called Sandbank Lake, situated 58 miles north of Tschotagama. It would have been suicide to have proceeded, for no further settlement could be made in the direction being taken by the balloon towards the interior of Labrador and Ungava. Otherwise the journey could have been indefinitely prolonged, for six bags of ballast remained.

"There was only time that afternoon before night came on for us to make ourselves comfortable for the night," said Hawley. "We slept in the basket of the car. Then next morning, packing up our balloon, which was uninjured and is to be brought out by a winter expedition over the snow, we started to walk towards Tschotagama, packing food in ballast bags. We made but little progress through the forest and construed the greater part of three days making the fifty miles. It was with difficulty that we made slow progress round the shore, which was composed of mountainous cliffs, huge boulders and thickets of alder bushes. We about made up our minds that we could never get out of the wilderness unaided.

"To our intense relief, on Sunday last, after suffering much from sleeping out in rain and snow, and being on short rations, we came upon a hunter's camp, near the River Blanche, the inlet of the lake. The owner, Joseph Maltais, was absent, but the hut was stocked with fuel, provisions, and we determined to await relief. Shouting at the top of our voices, we drew the attention of Joseph Pinaud and Jacques Simard. They were on their way to their winter fur hunt in the interior. They cached their provisions and agreed to return with us to civilization."

Was Kaiser In Danger?

Brussels, Oct. 29.—The extraordinary precautions taken Thursday night to protect Emperor William and Empress Augusta Victoria, when they left the city at 11 o'clock for Berlin, were explained yesterday when the police announced that a letter threatening His Majesty had been received at the royal palace on Thursday.

The communication was signed by a militant Brussels' anarchist and read: "Since no one has had the courage to blow up the German autocrat, I have decided to throw a bomb."

All of the windows of houses overlooking streets through which the royal party passed from the palace to the railway station were ordered closed temporarily, and the station itself was packed with troops.

Cardinal Logue's Tribute.

London, Oct. 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Responding to the presentation of an address of welcome on his return to Armagh, Cardinal Logue said the Eucharistic Congress had attained the highwater mark at Montreal. Nothing could surpass the magnificence of the display there. He gave his hearers a vivid description of scenes in Montreal and paid a tribute to the kindness and hospitality of Canadians of all creeds.

SMOKE FROM BURNING TAR KETTLE STARTED PANIC IN A SCHOOL

Child at Window of Academy du Sacre Coeur Sees Flame Under Roofing Pot and Starts a Panic—Children Forgot Fire Drill and in the Excitement Three Little Ones are Injured by Falling.

WENT MAD WITH FEAR

Special to The Examiner.

Montreal, Oct. 29.—Shrieking and colliding with each other, the nine hundred children went mad with fear, and threw the Sister attendants almost into a panic at 10 o'clock yesterday morning at the Academy du Sacre Coeur, Drolet street, when the smoke from a kettle of tar filtered into the institution from the backyard.

The injured were Adrienne Levoie, eight years old, 1,224 St. Dominique street, injured head by falling downstairs. Taken to Hotel Dieu. May die.

Annette St. Julien, 1,120 St. Andre street, injuries to head from heel of shoe.

Miss Derocher, 8 Rachel street, fracture to leg.

The last two victims were injured while sliding down the Asbestos fire-escape chute from the fourth storey.

The smoke swept into the institution in clouds, and one of the children near the window saw the flames from the burning pitch far down in the yard. Childish imagination did the rest, and the startling shriek of "Fire" ran through the school room and threw the pupils into a panic, which was soon communicated to the other class rooms throughout the school.

A bolt was made for the exits and in the scramble made by some forty pupils to get down by the stairs little Adrienne Lavoie fell several flights and was unconscious when picked up. The cooler-headed among the Sisters immediately tried to restore order and got the pupils to remember their fire drill.

The asbesto chute was got out of the window on the fourth floor and some fifty children descended rapidly to safety in the street. It was in the swift descent that the two other children were injured. Miss Derocher struck the ground with force and sustained what is believed to be a fracture of the leg, and little Annette St. Julien was injured on the head by the heel of the boot of the girl who was coming down the chute behind her.

MR. E. R. WOOD, TORONTO, IS MADE PRESIDENT OF Y.M.C.A. ASSOCIATION

Increase in Three Years of 60,000 Members Greater Than Previous 41 Years History of Institution—Three Canadians on Executive Committee.

GROWTH OF MOVEMENT

Toronto, Oct 29. That the growth of the Y.M.C.A. movement had been larger in the last three years than in all the forty-one years of the organization, previously, was called to the attention of the conveners in Massey Hall yesterday afternoon by Dr. L. C. Warren, chairman of the international committee. In three years, he said, the membership had increased 60,000, and the value of the buildings had swollen to $16,787,000, or 50 per cent. increase.

"Nothing in this recent growth of the association," continued Dr. Warren, "has been more significant than the progress of the work in Canada. To the Washington convention your committee reported the increase of its Canadian membership, their organization as a Canadian section with an office and a working quorum in Montreal and with a force of international Secretaries serving the Canadian Associations. The following members now constitute the Canadian section:

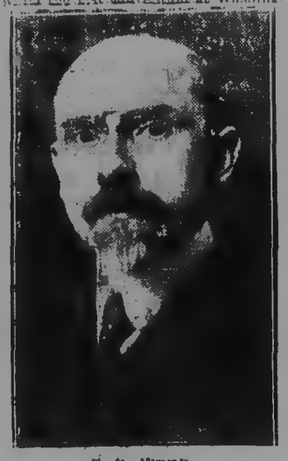
"Wm. M. Birks of Montreal, chairman; Albert Kingman, D. W. Ross, John W. Ross and Gerald W. Birks, also of Montreal; Harry Ryrie of Toronto, John Penman of Paris, Ont.; H. J. Crowe of Newfoundland, George E. Stephens of Winnipeg. As advisory members: D. A. Budge of Montreal, Samuel H. Blake and Robert A. Falconer of Toronto, and William Whyte of Winnipeg.

"The section continues to maintain a relation of leadership and great helpfulness to the supervision and development of association work throughout the Dominion. Under the wise administration of the Canadian section and the provincial committees, the development of association work among young men throughout the Dominion has been beyond precedent.

"In happy recognition of this rapid and significant progress the cordial invitation of the Toronto association to entertain this convention was gladly accepted by your committee."

Dr Warren attributed the growth of the association to the close relationship maintained to the Christian Church. Out of the Y.M.C.A. movement had come a federation of churches. Eighteen million Christians were by it united in Christian uplift.

Toronto has issued a big drawing card for the delegates to the International Y.M.C.A. convention. It promises to be the biggest yet in point of members, according to the calculations of W. H. Morrison of Baltimore, chairman of the credential committee. Last evening 1,263 delegates had registered from all parts of Europe, Asia, United States and Canada, and 800 more are expected between today and Monday noon. This will give well over 2,000, which the last convention at Washington three years ago had only 1,468, and this was the largest response that had been recorded up to that time. The next largest prior again was in 1904, when 1,341 attended.



E. R. WOOD.

The convention did a great honor to Canada and Toronto last evening in electing E. R. Wood of this city president for the next three years. The announcement of his name was hailed with acclaim. Canada got a representation of three others on the official list, which is a very flattering percentage.

The vice-presidents are Cyrus H. McCormick, Chicago; Alfred E. Marling, New York; W. A. Bowen, Honolulu; Charles L. Huston, Coatsville, Penn.; Harry L. Pierson, Detroit; James D. Hustad, Denver; F. A. McCormick, Sioux City, Iowa; John Penman, Paris, Ont.; E. G. Eberhart, South Bend, Ind.; J. C. Acheson, Danville, Ky.; John W. Ross, Montreal; James A. Dunmott, Seattle.

Secretary, George E. Coxhead, St. Louis; assistant secretaries, T. D. Patten, Winnipeg; W. A. Lloyd, Jacksonville, and Harry Ballantyne, Calgary.

We don't want your money—this test of Psychine is at our cost—we'll buy a 50-cent bottle from your druggist and give it you free to prove.

This is a hopeless, cold world to many.

"A vale of tears" in very truth sickness, suffering, sorrow.

And sickness is the cause of most of the misery.

Now a good many people accept sickness as something that has to be a visitation.

They may make ineffectual attempts to cure themselves, but they don't get well.

Now we want such hopeless ones to let us buy for them a 50-cent bottle of Psychine from their druggist, which we'll give them free of charge to let them know that there is at least one preparation that is hope for the hopeless, that will surely benefit them.

* * *

We've been making and selling Psychine for the third of a century.

We have sold many millions of bottles in that time.

Psychine has cured many hundreds of thousands of hopeless cases.

We have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials.

Psychine has proven itself to be the most remarkable preparation for the cure of disease.

Now Psychine's power comes from its ingredients.

Psychine is made from herbs—nature's own remedies.

And the herbs from which Psychine is made are beneficial to the body because they increase the number and strength of the white corpuscles of the blood, or the phagocytes, which devour every germ of disease that finds entrance to the body.

That's why Psychine cures where other old time remedies fail. That's why Psychine has stood the test of time for the third of a century. That's why we can afford to buy and give away hundreds of thousands of 50-cent bottles.

Now Psychine is indicated in the following diseases:

If the weather man is propitious the annual road races of the Examiner on Monday morning promise to be the most successful in the history of the event. The arrangements are now completed and everything is ready for what give indications of being the two most exciting races since the contests were inaugurated. If the same brand of weather which has always smiled on the event is forthcoming on Monday, there is every reason to expect that a record crowd will watch the finish of the contests and the vicinity of the Examiner office will be the scene of an enormous gathering. The co-operation of the spectators is asked for in helping to keep the course, at the finish, clear, so that the contestants will be able to finish without being interfered with. Last year there was very little trouble, and if the crowd on Monday will conduct itself in a similar manner there will be little complaint from the management. The spectators should bear in mind the fact that the race is not over as soon as the first man has breasted the tape and they should allow the others a chance.

Special arrangements are being made to ensure the contestants a clear road through the crowd.

The two races will be started simultaneously at 10.30. At the same time that Starter Graham gives the word to the dozen senior starters at Lakefield, Starter O'Brien will send away his field of forty young Marathoners. The youngsters should reach the 5th belt shortly before 11 o'clock. And the Seniors should be at the Examiner office about 11.25. The Examiner is printing souvenir programmes, giving the names and numbers of the contestants in both races, which will be given out on Monday morning and which will help the spectators in following the results.

Through the kindness of the officials of the Y. M. C. A. the contestants are invited to take advantage of the privileges of the Y.M.C.A. building. They may, if they wish, get into their running togs and leave their street clothes there and make use of the shower baths after the race. The junior runners will be taken out in 'busses, which will leave the Y. M. C. A. sharp at 9.15 o'clock. All starters are requested to be on hand sharp on time, as it will take some time to distribute numbers and give instructions to such a large field. The seniors may go to Lakefield on the morning G. T. R. train or may, if they prefer, be driven in a 'bus, which will leave the Y.M.C.A. building at 8.30 a.m. It has been arranged to have 'busses follow both races, to carry back the clothes of the contestants, and pick up the stragglers. The clothes will be taken to the Y. M. C. A. building after the race.

The probable result of the senior race is causing a great deal of interesting speculation. The starters, upon whom there are any lines to go on, are Albert Smoke, the Chemong Indian, who won last year; Charlie Thorpe, who has been second for the past two years; George Robinson of the Otonabee Athletic Club, fourth in 1909, and Morris Montgomery, and Charlie Knapp, who have been starters for the past two years. Added to this field are Walter Cole, the Y. M. C. A. entry; Ernest Coons, the well-known Lakefield and Bridgenorth soccer players; J. E. Lean, a Normal School student, who hails from Camborne, Ont.; Chas. Brimble and John Campbell, two unattached local entries, and Jimmy McMartin, of the Otonabee A. C., who has been in two Junior Examiner races.

This is undoubtedly the classiest field that ever lit the Lakefield pike, in the Examiner senior race. If Smoke is as good as he was last year the strong Gallopin Mississaguia boy will be one of the most dangerous starters. His performance last year will earn him the respect of the other contestants, as he breezed home an easy winner only fifty-two seconds behind Ernie Wilson's remarkable record of 55 minutes, 16 seconds. Had he been pushed the last two miles, he might have reduced the record. Charlie Thorpe, who ran second to Smoke, last year, will toe the mark for the fourth time, in Monday's race, and will be, as always, a man to be watched. He says he is not in as good shape as last year, but at that they will have to cut out a record clip to lose him. Geo Robinson, of the Otonabees, is a plugger, who never lets up and may surprise the talent. He will have an especially good chance if the going is heavy. Montgomery has been going fine in his workouts, and expects to be given a chance to the front. Walter Cole, of the Y. M. C. A., who is only a month or two old for the junior ranks, has a lot of hard training behind him to-day, and promises to be a contender at the wire. Knapp cannot be overlooked, and there may be a dark horse among the rest of the field who will "spill the beans" as Lou Marsh says he is out to remark in the Toronto Star, by beating all the fancied ones. Whatever the outcome, however, it will be a hitter race all along the route.

Willie Edwards, of Keene, winner of the Examiner Junior Race last year, when he set up a new record. He is one of 41 to face the starter Monday morning

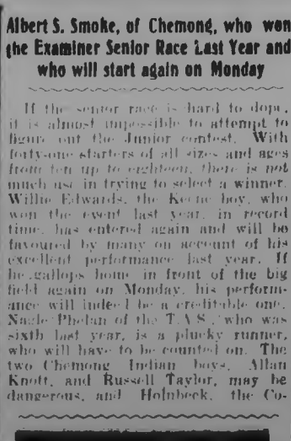
Jimmy McMartin, who has been second and third in Junior Examiner races and who has entered the Senior event.

Garnet Tovey, who was second in the Examiner Junior Race last year and in 1908

Geo. Robinson, of the Otonabee A. C., a starter in Monday's Senior Race. He was fourth last year

Teddy Heard, Fenelon Falls, third in the Examiner Junior Race last year

Albert S. Smoke, of Chemong, who won the Examiner Senior Race Last Year and who will start again on Monday



Ernie Wilson, holder of the record for the Examiner Senior race. His time, 55 min. 16 sec., was made in 1907

If there are two more evenly matched junior Rugby teams in Canada than the third team of the Peterborough Collegiate and the fourth fourteen of the Trinity College School, Port Hope, the Examiner would like to hear about them. A couple of weeks ago the local youngsters journeyed to Port Hope and were beaten after a hard game by 1 point to 0. This morning the same two teams battled on the slushy sward of Riverside Park, and when time was called the score was identically the same, but this time the one point scored was chalked up to the credit of the Peterborough team. That makes exactly two points for both teams in two games, and pretty nearly constitutes a record.

To-day's game was played under anything but favourable weather conditions. The ground was a combination of snow and slush, into which the players sank ankle deep, making the footing treacherous, and the ball heavy and hard to handle. However, the youngsters gave a good exhibition in all departments of the game, the tackling being especially good. Laing for Peterborough, was the star for both teams and got away with a lot of pretty ones, while he bucked nicely. The only point was scored on a kick into touch-in-goal by Laing in the middle of the second half. The teams were evenly balanced in weight.

The line up follows:

Peterborough Collegiates—Backs, Lowes, Smith, Laing, quarter, B Lees; scrimmage, Knapman, Conroy, Routley, wings, Carlisle, Huycke, Matthews, Armstrong, Newson, Long.

T. C. S.—Back, Stenton, halves, Smith, Waller, Ketchum; quarter, Grylls; scrimmage, McDonald, Wilson, Vibert; wings, Empbinghum, Downer, Edwards, McDonald, Evans, Walsh.

SMITH WINS GOLD MEDAL AT PORT HOPE

Harold Smith, of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A., made a splendid showing at the indoor meet under the auspices of the Port Hope Y.M.C.A. in the Skating Rink last night. The local runner competed in two events the three mile senior and the mile senior. He won the longer route in handy fashion from a field including Moore and Wallace of the Belleville Athletics, Conroy of the Port Hope Y.M.C.A. and Alexander McCreary of the Belleville Y.M.C.A. The prize was a handsome gold medal. The time was 16 mins. 50 secs. McCreary of Belleville was second. In the mile run Smith was second behind J. Caldwell of Trinity College School team Port Hope. Other entries were McConnell of Port Hope Y.M.C.A., Marshall of Belleville Athletics, Hain of Port Hope Y.M.C.A. and Alexander of the Belleville Y.M.C.A.

The T.C.S. team composed of T. Caldwell, C. Martin, Lindsay and MacAulay succeeded in winning the two mile relay race. The other teams were the Albert College of Belleville.

PRESENTATION TO MR. TURNER

Mr. W. R. Turner, foreman in the Adam Hall tinsmithing and plumbing departments, can face Thanksgiving with a doubly grateful heart. To-day he found on his desk, on his return from a temporary absence, a handsome gold-headed cane. An inscription engraved by Mr. A. Clark, jeweler, informed him that it was a present made by the workmen of the department under his charge to mark his birthday and also the completion of his twenty-second year of continuous connection with the firm. He has and above all to stand high in the esteem he enjoys at present in the relations that exist between him and the men employed in the department of Mr. Turner fully reciprocates the good feeling shown by the men and appreciates the handsome form and modest way in which it found expression. The joint that unites both parties to the pleasant little presentation was well "oiled".

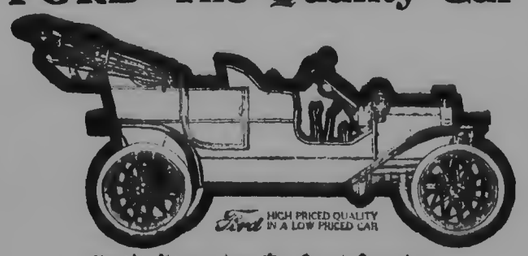
FORD--The Quality Car



Built Stronger To Last Longer

MANY a dollar has been saved in expense of operation by the owner of a Ford car. Why? Because the Ford Model T is built right—it is built of material that lasts longer and gives better service to its owner. Henry Ford, the manufacturer of this car, has spent millions of dollars in perfecting a car that would be of little expense or trouble to the owner. Vanadium steel is used in all working parts where wear is occasioned, for vanadium is the strongest steel obtainable and strength is what you get when you purchase a Ford. "Every part built for Strength and Service," is the common phrase at the Ford Factory. Mail us a card and we will call for you in this car of service. A ride in the Model T will convince you of the value in a Ford car.

A Call to Make Good.

Regina, Nov. 1.—In an interview yesterday, Chief of Police Zeats stated that he would give $1,000 to any missionary society if Mrs. Gordon Wright of London, Ont., could make good her statement, made at a recent meeting in St. Thomas, Ont., to the effect that Regina had a red light district into which white girls from the east had recently been inveigled. Chief Zeats characterized Mrs. Wright's statement as an unwarranted slander upon Regina, without the slightest foundation in fact.

SOCIAL VICE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

Toronto, Nov. 1.—The 37th triennial convention of the Y.M.C.A., which came to an auspicious close yesterday afternoon, after four days of consecration and discussion over world problems of evangelization. What the association has accomplished during the last decade is but a precursor of what it will do, and while recognizing that the opportunity of the present lies in Canada, the association will respond to the call from far-away fields and extend its ramifications to those kingdoms and continents whose fringe has only been touched by the Christianizing influence of western civilization.

The immediate effect of the Sunday afternoon meeting was considerably overshadowed by the optimistic outlook contained in the closing speech of the convention by John R. Mott New York, the giant leader of the Young Men's Christian Association. Whatever disappointment was felt at the loss of Mr. Mott's address, scheduled for the evening session, was compensated in the spiritual fervor of the few words he uttered during the closing minutes of the convention.

As Mr. Mott said, it was a memorable afternoon, full of the spirit of God, every moment inspired with the touch of the divine, firing the hearts of men to reach outward and dominate that those who come after that they might realize in a measure the responsibilities into which they were born. There was little time for singing and exultation, but the close hard-headed thinking of those closing hours would tell in the future reports of the home and foreign sections of the international committee.

An evening session had been arranged, but the wisdom of the international committee decreed that, as out of town engagements called many of the delegates away from Toronto it would be better to curtail the program, and conclude with the afternoon proceedings.

The afternoon session began with a general discussion on the theme, "Safeguarding the Boys of a Continent." Dr. Graham Taylor, Chicago, was the first speaker. And he dwelt upon the matter of juvenile delinquency. He prefaced his remarks by stating that his judgments were based upon the results of actual experience in boys' work. He referred to three investigations which had been instituted, one of which was perhaps more fundamental than any other. The records of the children's court in Cook County, Illinois, had been enquired into for twenty years back and the history, surrounding conditions and cause of the crimes with, and the subsequent experience which the delinquents had been charged were thoroughly gone into. These reports covered 20,000 cases. The social view Dr. Taylor declared, was responsible for a large number of crime.

The first thing to do in dealing with juvenile delinquents, he said, was to know the condition which creates or promote the delinquency in boy. It was necessary, however, to distinguish between conditions and antecedents.

Antecedents played a great part in determining a boy's character, for every-day conditions of home life were a load-stone around the will that determine the course of the ship of life.

WESTERN FARMERS LOSE CROPS AND BUILDINGS IN PRAIRIE FIRES

Winnipeg, Nov. 1. Several districts in Saskatchewan suffered severely from prairie fires on Saturday, when a heavy windstorm passed over the whole province. At Indian Head a strip of country seven miles wide was burned over, and 9,000 bushels of wheat were destroyed. W. H. Ford and James Jackson lost their granaries, with the season's crop, and S. O. Holden and several others lost considerable quantities of oats. In the Yorkton district the fires raged in all directions. Levi Beck lost his granaries and 4,000 bushels of wheat, and A. Waterfield lost all his stables, two valuable horses, granary, and 6,000 bushels of grain. The losses will total $10,000.

The fires are still raging in Orkney, White and Wallace districts. At Theodore the wind was very high, and grass fires threatened several farms. E. Reese lost four valuable horses, which he had to abandon while trying to plow a fireguard around his haystack. Two horses burned to death with the stack, while two others were so severely burned by grass that they had to be destroyed.

At Fort Qu'Appelle fire started from the Indian reservation and burned swiftly through Springbrook to near the town. Several farmers lost granaries and stacks, one man losing 1,000 bushels of wheat. The fire is supposed to have been started from the thrashing outfit working on the reservation, and operated by one of the Indian Department employes. It is expected that the farmers who suffered loss will take action against the department. At Kamsack, Sask., fire swept the Fort Pelly district R. S. Dundas lost forty tons of hay and 2,000 bushels of grain.

On Saturday last during the heavy wind a fire swept through Turtle Mountain, south of Desford, Man., traveling furiously through the bush and scrub, destroying much standing timber and fencing, also houses and outbuildings. The damage is estimated at $8,000 outside of the standing timber. W. Turner lost his house, stables, ninety tons of hay, fifty cords of wood, and all his grain. His wife and family barely escaped with their lives, running to a plowed field where they remained until the fire passed. Turner saved nothing but a fur coat, with which he covered his children to save them from the intense heat. Jesse Robins lost his house, barns, three head of cattle and the whole season's crop of grain, hay and vegetables. Mr. Robins was severely burned about the hands and face. Mr. Robins, sen., lost his barns and hay, also all his implements, but managed to save his house.

Ralph Johnstone Is Now The Aviator Champion

New York, Nov. 1.—A "baby" Wright roadster, with Ralph Johnstone at the wheel, glided gracefully to earth in the twilight at the close of the international aviation meet at Belmont Park last evening, with the barograph registering a new world's record for altitude. The little machine of only 35 horse-power was up 9,714 feet, exceeding by 52 feet the height attained in France on Oct. 1 by Henry Wynmalen of Holland.

But Johnstone's sky-climbing feat was not the only notable incident of the closing day of the meet. Claude Grahame-White, the athletic Briton, who carries away the Gordon-Bennett trophy, which takes the next international tournament to England, sharpened the sporting appetite with a challenge to John B. Moissant, the Chicagoan, to race again from the park around the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor and return. Moissant, who won $10,000 for his fast flight around the statue Sunday, ignored the challenge.

Then Grahame-White, denied another chance to Miss Liberty, thrilled the spectators, when at the close of a speed race with J. A. D. McCurdy of the Curtiss team, his propeller snapped, his monoplane dug into the green sward in front of the grand stand, turned turtle and buried him underneath it. He was uninjured, however, and won the race.

Moissant's winning of the $2,000 distance prize offered by the Aero Club of America was the other big event of the day. He traveled approximately 87 1-2 miles in two hours. In landing after winning the event he smashed his propeller and broke a running wheel, but escaped unscathed.

"It was a pretty purple haze up there," said Johnstone after he had finished his world record flight, "and say, but it was cold. I had a couple of sweaters on, besides my rubber suit and face mask, but even then at times I felt freezing.

"Several times I completely lost sight of the earth, but when I shot clear of the haze, I could see away down below buildings and residences which looked like toy blocks. I have been flying only since June, but it sure was the most satisfactory trip I have ever made."

As the crowds about the judges' stand cheered and cheered the announcement of Johnstone's wonderful feat, J. Armstrong Drexel then swooped down to earth. He had been competing in the clouds with the Wright pupil, but had attained only 8,370 feet. Johnstone had easily won the grand altitude event, with its $5,000 prize.

The two-hour distance race for a purse of $3,500, donated by members of the Aero Club of America, the purse was split, so that there were three prizes. It was a queer race. When the finish flag went up, two hours after the start, Moissant was declared the winner. He had been around the course 56 times, a distance of about 87 1-2 miles. As he came to earth, victorious, the accident to his machine occurred. Latham was second in this race, with 36 laps to his credit, and Simon third, with 27 laps. Moissant took away $2,000; Latham $1,000 and Simon $500.

The speed race between Grahame-White in a monoplane, and McCurdy in a biplane, was a demonstration of the superiority of the monoplane as a racer. They both did ten laps of the course—a distance of about 15.53 miles. Grahame-White's unofficial time was 14.34.12; McCurdy's was 25.43.04. The Briton won $3,000, and McCurdy got $1,000.

Grahame-White Loses $10,000.

Belmont Park, N.Y., Nov. 1.—John B. Moissant, the American aviator, was officially declared yesterday as winner of the flight to the Statute of Liberty in New York harbor and return yesterday for the $10,000 offered by Thomas F. Ryan. In one of the most thrilling races in the history of aviation, Moissant beat his rival Count Jacques de Lesseps, the French man, and Claude Grahame-White, the British winner of the Gordon-Bennett trophy on Saturday, easily distancing his French competitor, but defeating the victor in the Gordon-Bennett event by only 43 seconds.

This margin, however narrow was sufficient, although it was thought until the early hours of yesterday that Moissant had not clinched his victory, as it was understood the race was still open for competition yesterday. The Aero Club of America, however, sustained Moissant and a protest against further competition for the prize, ruling that the meet was originally scheduled closed with Sunday's events, yesterday being an extra or added day. Thus Moissant won in the elapsed time of 34.38.48; Grahame-White second in 35.21.30; De Lesseps third in 41.56.25.

Claude Grahame-White says he will issue an official challenge to Moissant and put up a purse of $10,000 for another flight around the Statute of Liberty or over any other course that the winner of Saturday's contest may choose. Grahame-White claimed that the meet is not officially closed, but said he was tired of making protests. He said he was confident of beating Moissant.

Old Almonte Man Dead.

Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Nov. 1.—Alexander G. MacDonald, for twenty-eight years a member of the faculty of Eastman Business College, and who is known to thousands of business graduates all over the country, died here yesterday. Prof. MacDonald came here from Almonte, Ont., and was a son of Dr. Alexander MacDonald of Dunfermline, Scotland. He was 55 years of age, and a prominent Mason.

A Start on Reciprocity.

Washington, Nov. 1.—The possibilities for reciprocity with Canada have progressed to the point where the tariff board is about to take up some of the schedules of the present law which would be affected.

The chemical schedule, upon which a start was made several weeks ago, will be allowed to wait, tentatively at least, and it is said to be not unlikely that a revision of the lumber schedule, which would be one of the principle factors in a reciprocity arrangement, will take its place.

Experts who have been working on the pulpwood and paper schedule, in which the Canadian arrangements also would be concerned, are making progress beyond the expectations of the board. Several of the largest paper companies have volunteered to furnish important information, which it was at one time doubtful if the board could obtain.

The Michaud Case.

Montreal, Nov. 1.—Achille Decome, the chauffeur who drove the Michaud girl, now under arrest, will appear to-day and will plead to the charge of killing the unfortunate young woman. The evidence against him is not by any means conclusive, although the general opinion appears to be drifting around in favor of the two men. Pursuit and Chevrier, against whom no evidence has yet been secured, except that they were with the girl at the Belvedere Hotel yet it is quite probable that they left her early in the evening.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"Can you spare me a few minutes, Mr. Ducaine?" he asked. "I will not detain you long."

"I am at your service, Lord Blenavon," I answered.

"We will go into the hall and have a smoke," he suggested, leading the way. "To me it seems the only place in the house free from draughts."

I followed him to where, in a dark corner of the great dome-shaped hall, a wide cushioned lounge was set against the wall. He seated himself and motioned me to follow his example. For several moments he remained silent, twisting a cigarette with thin nervous fingers stained yellow with nicotine. Every now and then he glanced furtively around. I waited for him to speak. He was Lady Angela's brother, but I disliked and distrusted him.

He finally got his cigarette alight and turned to me.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "I want you to apologize to my friend, the Prince of Malors, for your behaviour this afternoon."

"Apologize to the Prince!" I exclaimed. "Why should I?"

"Because this is the only condition on which he will consent to remain here."

"I should have thought," I said, "that his immediate departure was inevitable. I detected him in behaviour——"

"That is just where you are wrong," Blenavon interrupted eagerly. "You were mistaken, entirely mistaken."

I laughed, a little impolitely. I am afraid, considering that this was the son of my employer.

"You know the circumstances?" I asked.

He nodded.

"The Prince has explained them to me. It was altogether a misunderstanding. He left his foot a little easier, and he was simply looking for a newspaper or something to read until you returned. Inadvertently he turned over some of your manuscript and at that moment you entered."

"Most inopportunely, I am afraid!" I answered, with an unwilling smile. "I am sorry, Lord Blenavon, that I cannot accept this explanation of the Prince's behaviour. I am compelled to take the evidence of my eyes and ears as final."

Blenavon sucked at his cigarette fiercely for a minute, threw it away and commenced to roll another.

"It's all rot!" he exclaimed. "Malors wouldn't do a mean action, and, besides, what on earth has he to gain? He is a fanatical Royalist. He is not even on speaking terms with the Government of France today."

"I perceive," I remarked, looking at him closely, "that you are familiar with the nature of my secretarial work."

He returned my glance, and it seemed to me that there was some hidden meaning in his eyes which I failed to catch.

"I am in my father's confidence," he said slowly.

There was a moment's silence. I was listening to a distant voice in the lower part of the hall.

"Am I to take it, Mr. Ducaine, then," he said at last, "that you decline to apologize to the Prince?"

"I have nothing to apologize for," I answered calmly. "The Prince was attempting to obtain information in an illicit manner by the perusal of papers which were in my charge."

Blenavon rose slowly to his feet. His eyes were fixed upon the opposite corner of the hall. Lady Angela who had just descended the stairs, was standing there, pale and unsubstantial as a shadow, and it seemed to me that her eyes, as she looked across at me, were full of trouble. She came slowly towards us. Blenavon laid his hand upon her arm.

"Angela," he said, "Mr. Ducaine will not accept my word. I can make no impression upon him. Perhaps he will be more readily believe yours."

"Lady Angela will not ask me to disbelieve the evidence of my own senses," I said confidently.

She stood between us. I was aware from the first of something unfamiliar in her manner, something of which a glimmering had appeared on our way home through the wood.

"It is about Malors, Angela," he continued. "You were there. You know all that happened. Malors is very reasonable about it. He admits that his actions may have seemed suspicious. He will accept an apology from Mr. Ducaine, and remain."

She turned to me.

"And you?" she asked.

"The idea of an apology," I answered, "appears to me ridiculous. My own poor little possessions were wholly at his disposal. I caught him however, in the act of meddling with papers which are mine only on trust."

Lady Angela played for a moment with the dainty trifles which hung from her bracelet. When she spoke she did not look at me.

"The Prince's explanation," she said, "is plausible, and he is our guest. I think perhaps it would be wisest to give him the benefit of the doubt."

"Doubt!" I exclaimed, bewildered. "There is no room for doubt in the matter."

Then she raised her eyes to mine, and I saw there new things. I saw trouble and appeal, and behind both the shadow of mystery.

"Have you spoken to my father?" she asked.

"Yes," I answered.

"Did he accept—your view?"

"He did not," I answered bitterly. "I could not convince him of what I saw with my own eyes."

"You have done your duty, then," she said softly. "Why not let the rest go? As you told us just now, this is not a personal matter, and there are reasons why he did not wish the Prince to leave suddenly."

I was staggered. I held my peace, and the two stood watching me. Then I heard footsteps approaching us, and a familiar voice.

"What trio of conspirators is this talking so earnestly in the shadows? Ah!"

The Prince had seen me, and he stood still. I faced him at once.

"Prince," I said, "it has been suggested to me that my eyesight is probably defective. It is possible in that case that I have not seen you before today, that the things with which I charge you are false, that in all probability you were in some other place altogether. If this is so, I apologize for my remarks and behaviour towards you."

He bowed with a faint mirthless smile.

"It is finished, my young friend," he declared. "I wipe it out from my memory."

It seemed to me that I could hear Blenavon's sigh of relief, that the shadow had fallen from Lady Angela's face. There was a little murmur of satisfaction from both of them. But I turned abruptly, and with scarcely even an attempt at a conventional farewell I left the house, and walked homewards across the Park.

CHAPTER XV.

TWO FAIR CALLERS

After three days the house party at Rowchester was somewhat unexpectedly broken up. Lord Chelsford departed early one morning by special train, and the Duke himself and the remainder of his guests left for London later on in the day. I remained behind with three weeks' work, and a fear which never left me by day or by night. Yet the relief of solitude after the mysteries of the last few days was in itself a thing to be thankful for.

For nine days I spoke with no one save Grooton. For an hour every afternoon, and for rather longer at night, I walked on the cliffs or the sands. Here on these lonely stretches of empty land I met no one, saw no living thing save the seagulls. It was almost like a corner of some forgotten land. These walks, and an occasional few hours' reading, were my sole recreation.

It was late in the afternoon when I saw a shadow pass my window, and immediately afterwards there was a timid knock at the door. Grooton had gone on his daily pilgrimage with letters to the village, so I was obliged to open it myself. To my surprise it was Blanche Moyat who stood upon the threshold. She laughed a little nervously.

"I'm no ghost, Mr. Ducaine," she said, "and I shan't bite!"

"Forgive me," I answered. "I was hard at work and your knock startled me. Please come in."

I ushered her into my sitting-room. She was wearing what I recognized as her best clothes, and not being entirely at her ease she talked loudly and rapidly.

"Such a stranger as you are, Mr. Ducaine," she exclaimed. "Fancy—it's getting on for a month since we any of us saw a sign of you, and I'm sure never a week used to pass but father'd be looking for you to drop in. We heard that you were living here all by yourself, and this morning mother said, perhaps he's ill. We tried to get father to come up and see, but he's off to Downham market to-day, and goodness knows what he'd find time if we left it to him. So I thought I'll come and find out for myself."

"I am quite well, thanks, Miss Moyat," I answered, "but very busy. The Duke has been giving me some work to do, and he has lent me his cottage, so that I shall be close at hand. I should have looked you up the first time I came to Brasted, but as a matter of fact I have not been there since the night of my lecture."

She was nervously playing with the fastening of her umbrella, and it seemed to me that her silence was purposeful. I ventured some remark about the weather, which she interrupted ruthlessly.

"It's mile and a half to our house from here," she said, "not a step farther. I don't see why you should not have made a purpose journey."

I ignored the reproach in her eyes, as I had every right to do. But I began to understand the reason of her nervousness and her best clothes, and I prayed for Grooton's return.

"If I had an evening to myself," I said, "I should certainly have paid your father a visit. But as it happens, the Duke has required me at the house every night while he was here and he has left me enough work to do to keep me busy night and day till he comes back."

She looked down upon the floor.

"I had to come and see you," she said in a low tone. "Sometimes I can't sleep for thinking of it. I feel that I haven't done right."

I knew, of course, what she meant.

"I thought we had talked all that out long ago," I answered, a little wearily. "You would have been very foolish if you had acted differently. I don't see how else you could have acted."

"Oh, I don't know," she said. "We were always brought up very particular especially about telling the truth."

"Well, you haven't said anything that wasn't the truth," I reminded her.

"Oh, I don't know. I haven't said what I ought to say," she declared. "It seems all right when you are with me, and talk about it," she continued slowly, raising her eyes to mine. "It's when I don't see you for weeks and weeks that it seems to get on my mind, and I get afraid I don't understand it. I don't understand it even now."

"Don't understand what?" I repeated.

She looked around. Her air of troubled mystery was only half assumed.

"How that man died," she whispered.

"I can assure you that I did not kill him, if that is what you mean," I told her coolly. "The matter is over and done with. I think that you are very foolish to give it another thought."

She shuddered.

"Men can forget those things easier," she said. "Perhaps he had a wife and children. Perhaps they are wondering all this time what has become of him."

"People die away from their homes and families every day, every hour," I answered. "It is only morbid to brood over one particular example."

"Father would never forgive me if he knew," she murmured, irrelevantly. "He hates us to do anything underhand."

I heard Grooton return with a sigh of relief.

"You will have some tea," I suggested.

She shook her head and stood up. I did not press her.

"No, I won't," she said. "I am sorry I came. I don't understand you, Mr. Ducaine. You seem to have changed altogether just these last few weeks. I can see that you are dying to get rid of me now, but you were glad enough to see me, or at any rate you pretended to be, once."

The Kidneys Wear Out

But many people of advanced years have learned how to keep these organs healthy by using

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The kidneys are often the first organs of the body to cause trouble. Their work of filtering the blood is greatly increased by excessive eating or by the use of highly seasoned foods and alcoholic drinks.

As advanced age comes on most people suffer more or less from derangements of the kidneys. With some there are years of pains and aches, with others Bright's disease is soon developed and the end comes quickly.

Fortunately a great many have learned about Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, and are enabled by their use to keep the kidneys healthy and active.

This medicine is entirely different from ordinary kidney treatments, and invigorates the action of the liver and bowels. To the combined action is attributed its remarkable success.

Mr. Richard Preston, Osborne, Lambton county, Ont., writes:—"I want to testify to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Seventeen years ago I began the use of this medicine, when my back was so bad that to stoop or rise was torture to me. The kidneys were in bad condition, but these pills entirely freed me of back pains. I have used them ever since whenever the kidneys would get out of order, and now, at eighty years, am well and hearty, thanks to this grand medicine."

NATURE SPARES.

The Stricken Rose From Grief.

What a fortunate provision of nature it is, that deprives the rose of mental suffering; for how poignant would be its grief to discover, in the height of its blooming glory, that a canker fed at its heart, and that its beauty and fragrance were doomed forever. Nature always spares the suffering; she is a veritable store-house of pleasing rewards, for those who seek her aid. In the years gone by falling hair and grayness have cast a gloom over the lives of thousands of young women, but thanks to the investigation of scientists the true cause of hair destruction is now known to be a germ or parasite that burrows into the hair follicles. Newbro's Herpicide absolutely destroys this germ, thus permitting the hair to grow as nature intended. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

For sale by McDermid and Jury, druggists; also Payne's drug store. $1 bottles guaranteed.

MURDER A BUSINESS

German Youths Had Their Minds Turned to Killing by a Book on Psychology

The psychology of the German criminal is being unfolded by the trial at Leipsig of two youths of the working class, accused of two murders, three attempts at murder and an attempt at blackmail.

The crimes were spread over a period of four years, during the greater part of which the accused were living with their parents and two sisters. The criminals made full confession in open court, and while one cannot but be shocked at the brutality and ferocity of the crimes, one feels moved on learning that part of the motive to the crimes was the relief of the family from starvation.

At one stage of the confession the elder brother tells how in his dispair he reflected that "he must be without feeling for his fellow men, and that of all mistakes sentimentality is the greatest."

He went on to say that he had been a great reader, and mentioned a work on psychology as having made a strong impression on him. The two lads formed a plan to kill a "money-carrier," or letter-carrier, whose duty it is to deliver to the payee in person money sent through the post. Half the monetary transactions of the empire are carried on in this way, and the postmen often carry large sums.

To attain their object it is necessary for the accused to send an order payable to themselves and hire a room in which the letter-carrier could be murdered. As a preliminary the landlord and his wife had to be murdered, and this wa sdone without compunction. When the letter-carrier arrived his life was saved by the fact that a fellow-carrier was along with him.

One of the attempts to murder disclosed a very peculiar state of mind on the part of one of the youths. The accused's own words are: "I was feeling miserable and ready to murder anybody A lady passed me in the street and it seemed to me that she looked at me with contempt. There was something about her which made me wild. I followed her. I did not want to rob her, I wanted to murder her. I felt a boundless hate against humanity and said to myself that if she went into a house I would follow her and cut her throat." As a matter of fact she did go into a house, he followed, and the attempt to cut her throat was only foiled by the thickness of a boa she happened to be wearing. The other attempts at murder, each of which had been carefully planned by the brothers beforehand, were made on the lives of a girl in service with a rich and solitary old lady and of another money-carrier, whom they robbed and almost murdered on the stairs.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

A man once called at an hotel and asked if he could exhibit his Performing Flea. The manager gave his consent, and when all the guests were assembled, he brought out a small box. Taking the lid off, he said, "Henry" (that was the name of the flea), "jump out of the box." Henry did as he was told.

He then said, "Henry, jump over the box." But the flea, instead of doing so, jumped on a young lady's arm and went up her sleeve. The young lady soon caught it, and placed it upon the table again.

The man then said, "Henry get back in your box." But the flea never moved. He said it again, with the same result. Then he picked the flea up and looked it over, and said, rather sorrowfully, "Madam, this is not my Henry!"

Unwittingly, upon their sunny honeymoon, she had said something that rubbed him the wrong way.

"Oh, my darling, my darling," she cried, seeing the look of pique upon his face, "I have hurt you!"

"No, my dearest," he answered gravely; "the hurt I feel is due to the fact that I know it hurts you to think you have hurt me."

"Ah," she exclaimed, "do not let that hurt you for an instant! My hurt is because I know it hurts you to feel I have hurt myself by hurting you!"

"No, no, my precious!" he cried. "My hurt is because you are hurt over feeling that I am hurt because you feel that you have hurt me, and therefore hurt yourself."

A PUZZLED CELT

A class in a certain art school was recently startled by the sudden appearance in its midst of a ragged Irishman, who, with tears in his eyes, begged for enough money to get him a "bite." The first impulse of the presiding genius was to request him to move on; but his picturesqueness suggested that he should be given a chance to earn his supper by sitting as a model.

"Sit down," said the instructor, kindly. "If you permit these ladies to paint you, we will pay you a shilling. What do you say?"

"If Oi'll let 'em what?" replied the beggar, with a puzzled look on his face.

"Paint you—paint you. It won't take very long."

"Bedad, Oi want the shillin' bad enough," he replied, after a moment's reflection. "An' Oi'll be very glad to let the young ladies paint me, if ye'll tell me how'll Oi get the paint aff av me afterwards!"

The military manoeuvres were going on. All afternoon the attackers had attacked, and the defenders defended, with conspicuous lack of incident or bravery. Operations were beginning to drag horribly, when the white flag went up.

"PLAY BALL"! IN POLITICS.

"POP" Anson Tells of Heroes of the Diamond Who Are Making Good in Other Fields, Notably a Candidate for Governor and a Famous Hustler Out After a Senatorship

"Pop" Anson.

A. G. Spalding.

AT a recent ball game played at the American League park, New York city, an amiable looking giant in a gray suit and bright crimson four-in-hand, his head topped by a panama that had worn well and was still wearing, was the centre of an admiring group in one corner of the grand stand. The big fellow with the rosy cheeks and debonair manner was Captain Adrian Constantine Anson, affectionately known as "Pop" in the days when he led his Chicago nine to victory in so many hard fought campaigns. His companions were baseball celebrities of a later vintage, and they were paying the most exclusive attention to what the veteran was saying while waiting for the game to be called.

"I know it's the common impression that there's no future for a retired professional baseball player," the Captain was observing. "Now, that may be true as a general proposition, but I don't mind telling you there are quite a number of exceptions. Not every man who has put the best years of his life into the game is fated to become the proprietor of a corner gin mill or to set up the pins in a bowling alley.

"Now there's Albert G. Spalding; what about Al? I see he's out for the United States Senatorship from California, with a mighty fair prospect of making good. Well, even if he doesn't get there the mere fact that he has tried to is enough to prove that at least one professional has refused to believe that it was all over with him when he quit the game. It's my impression that Spalding would have been considerable of a man even if he hadn't gone into baseball.

"Al was one of the first professional players I ever saw and the first I ever spoke to. Now that I recall it, our acquaintance didn't begin in a very promising manner. I don't suppose two men ever came closer to a scrimmage and missed than Spalding and I on that day of our first meeting.

"We were both kids—Al might have been eighteen and I was a year or so his junior, although he had been a full fledged professional for a couple of years. I was only an amateur at the time, but I don't mind telling you that even then there wasn't room for anything else besides baseball in my system, and my father and my brother were in the same condition. The old gentleman kept the Anson House, at Marshalltown, Iowa, but we never let the hotel business interfere with baseball. I had organized a home team and we had been so lucky in our match games with the State clubs that I proposed to our folks to invite the professional Forest Citys, of Rockford, Ill., then giving a series of exhibitions in Iowa, to come to Marshalltown and be wiped off the earth.

"It so happened that the Forest Citys had nothing better to do, and they accepted our bid. Al Spalding was pitcher for the visitors and his work was a revelation to me. I had never seen anything so neat in the baseball line, and I was so taken with his easy way of doing things that I almost forgot to play the game. His personal appearance and manner, too, made a great impression on me. He certainly was one of the finest looking youngsters I have ever seen, and I took a strong liking to him at first sight.

The Time That Albert G. Spalding Apologized

"That good impression didn't last. Before the game was over—we were getting pulverized and that may have had something to do with it—I changed my opinion in regard to the star pitcher. The visitors brought their own umpire with them, and after a little he and Al began to get coltish, the latter pitching as many freak balls as he wished without being called. I didn't approve of such foolishness, but I kept mum until something occurred that made me as mad as a March hare. Father was at the bat, but he wouldn't hit at Al's wild ones and waited patiently for the frisky pitcher to get down to business. Finally Al let go a vicious one that just grazed the old gentleman's cheek. At that father threw down the bat and walked over toward Al with a stride that meant business. I saw the fire in his eye and I was with him in an instant.

"Spalding saw that he had put himself in a ticklish position—father and I were facing him and my brother was on his way across the field to join us—and he began to crawl. I was fairly sizzling with indignation and wanted to beautify the young man's features, but the old gentleman wouldn't have it. He accepted the pitcher's apology and the game went on, the visitors beating us by a score of 35 to 3.

"Spalding didn't bear any grudge against me, although I don't see how he could have helped feeling a little sore. Shortly afterward the Rockford folk tried to engage the three of us to play on their team the next season, and I learned afterward that Spalding had advised them to do it. Of course that made me feel friendly toward him again.

"I went to Rockford and Al went to pitch for the Bostons. I saw but little of him until the summer of 1874, when the Athletic club, of Philadelphia, of which I was then a member, and the Boston team, for which Spalding was pitching, went over to the other side to show our British cousins that cricket was not the only sport worth while. At that time Al was regarded as the best pitcher in the profession and was a great favorite with both press and public. Old Harry Chadwick, the 'Father of Baseball,' you know, once told me that in judgment, command of the ball, pluck, endurance and nerve Al had no equal. I will go a little further and say that he could disguise a change of pace in such a manner as to deceive the most expert batsman, while as a scientific hitter he had few superiors. He had brains and used them.

"In 1876 Al came to the Chicago club and remained with it as manager, secretary and president consecutively until 1891. He and his brother and brother-in-law went into the sporting goods business at the same time and made good all round. He also organized a manufacturing company and became its president. Talk about a ball player not being fit for anything else! Why, that man could have managed a dozen things at once. It was just because he hadn't enough to do to take up all his time that he organized the Chicago and All America baseball tour around the world in 1888-89. Made a success of that, didn't he? I don't mind telling you that he'll do exactly the same thing if he breaks into the Senate. Now, I've been associated with Al Spalding in the baseball business for a good many years, and we haven't always agreed upon everything, but you can take it from me that he's a mighty lot better qualified to be a lawmaker than many a man that never pitched a curve for a living.

"Don't you believe for a minute that Al couldn't hold his own when it came to addressing his fellow Senators. You have it from me direct that he is one of the best offhand speakers I ever heard. When we stopped over in Honolulu on our round the world trip King Kalakaua gave us a big reception in the palace grounds. The Attorney General of Hawaii welcomed us in a very pretty speech, but you ought to have heard Al's oration in reply. Say, honest, I don't believe old Cicero himself could have done better. In Australia Spalding made several speeches, every one of them top notchers. Oh, he can orate all right, and there's plenty of meat in what he says. If Al breaks into the Senate he'll leave a lot of the other fellows way behind when it comes to speechmaking.

A Situation Too Complex for Spalding to Manage.

"I never saw Spalding completely knocked down and out but once. It was on our round the world tour when we were trying to play a game at Naples. It was our first game on European soil and we wanted it to go off nicely, but it came near ending in a fiasco owing to our ignorance of the language and the Italians' ignorance of the game. Al had been studying Italian on the quiet ever since we left Colombo, and United States Minister Camphausen gave him a lot of coaching as to how things were to be managed during the game. When we reached the Campo de Marte where the show was to be pulled off, we found the place filled with people not one of whom had ever seen a game of ball. They swarmed over the field like an army of grasshoppers, and it was with the greatest difficulty that we cleared a space sufficient to begin. Even after we began to play the crowd kept pouring into the field, making fielding well nigh impossible and batting dangerous.

"Al stood it for a while and then he began to boil over. 'Go right out!' he shouted to the players. Carroll was at the bat. He hit out and the ball knocked a guinea senseless. That didn't seem to do a thing but amuse the crowd and they kept right on swarming all over the place. For three innings neither side scored. In the fourth each got a man across the plate. In the fifth the All Americas increased their score by seven runs, and then the crowd, thinking the game was over, piled all over the field. Spalding broke loose and tried to clear the place so the game could go on, but the louder he shouted and the more he flourished his arms the more that crowd wouldn't go back.

"It was right then and there that I heard Al make use of an expression that in some respects was the most original cuss word I ever heard. The umpire that day was John Tener. Say, what's the matter with Tener? He's another professional player that didn't go into a hole and draw the hole in after him when he quit the game."

"But, Captain Anson," interposed one of his auditors, "we want to hear what it was that Spalding said."

"Never mind what it was. Part of it was Italian, anyhow, some that he had picked up on the way to Brindisi, and I guess he didn't know how tough it sounded. I'm going to tell you something about John Tener. He's one of my friends, you know, and I've always been interested in him. They say he's likely to be the next Governor of Pennsylvania. Well, if he gets there the old Keystone State will find she has made no mistake. John's a thoroughbred.

How Pop Anson Discovered John Tener.

"Ever hear how I discovered John? I happened to be in Pittsburg one afternoon, and to kill a little time went out to see the amateur Athletics play some rural team. The game was on when I got there, and I hadn't more than taken my seat before I took notice of a big fellow who was pitching after a fashion that made a great big hit with me in about five minutes. I saw him twirl his long arms above his head, twist his long body into position and then make that sphere perform parts of circles in the air to beat anything I had ever seen in the business. I made up my mind that a twirler of that breed was what the Chicago team needed to make it perfect, and I asked somebody to lead me to him.

A. P. Gorman.

"The big kid said his name was John K. Tener and that he was a bookkeeper in a steel concern. I asked him 'how the' he got on to that curve, and he grinned and said he didn't exactly know but supposed it must come natural. I told him right then and there that if he was tired of bookkeeping I knew of another job that was his for the asking. He said he wasn't stuck on figures anyhow, and I named a salary that made his eyes stick out. 'Do you accept?' I put it straight. 'I certainly do, with thanks,' he said.

"From the first he was the most popular man on the team. He had a jovial, sunny way about him that simply took you by storm, and, I don't mind telling you, he was a great player. Of course he made a specialty of pitching, but John could drive a ball some when the bases were just aching to unload and the crowd was yelling so you couldn't have heard a load of dynamite explode in front of you."

"Honestly, Captain Anson, do you really believe that Tener's curves would mystify the star players of to-day as they did when he pitched for you?" asked one of the group.

"These alleged stars of to-day couldn't teach John a thing," maintained the captain loyally. "He could do anything in those days with the ball that others have learned since then and a whole lot that they never have got on to. Don't you believe for a minute that the game of to-day is a bit more scientific than it used to be. I have watched the game pretty carefully, perhaps none more closely, and I don't mind telling you that all this talk about modern progress is mere rot. Furthermore, you can give it out as coming straight from me that the game isn't being played as well to-day as it was a dozen years ago. I leave you to figure out the why and wherefore.

John K. Tener's Idea of a Joke.

"When Mr. Spalding and Lee Lynch get up the round-the-world scheme Tener was made secretary of the promoting company in addition to his duties on the diamond. That was because he was an expert accountant, and I guess the extra salary seemed pretty good to John, for he was only a big kid and liked to see a little of life as he went along. His partner in the box was Mark Baldwin, now a successful physician in Pittsburg, who gave no sign at that time of developing into the well known sawbones he became later. Mark was as keen for a joke as anybody I ever saw, and he seemed to take a special delight in rigging Tener. John was the best natured man in the world and took everything that came along. Once, however, he succeeded in getting a good one on Mark. It was while we were at Melbourne, Australia. There had been much festivity during the day and early in the evening, and the boys had found everything wide open to them. Perhaps they were unusually hilarious that evening, and I don't wonder at it. Well, by seven o'clock most of the men had gone to bed, but Baldwin concluded to take a nap in his chair at the Coffee Palace, a resort in which some of the fellows had been spending part of the evening. Tener struggled in about midnight and discovered his partner fast asleep.

"John happened to have a packet of red fire in his pocket, and it was but the work of a moment for him to dump it on the window sill in front of Baldwin and touch it off. Then he yelled "Fire!" and rushed out of the building. Mark woke with a shriek. He told me afterward that he was under the impression that he had landed in the place we are all anxious to avoid. With a bound he rushed for the door and tore it off its hinges in his effort to reach the open. He never stopped running until he hit the hotel, where he found the boys lined up to give him the merry guffaw."

"Is it a fact that Tener was once asked to explain the game of baseball to the King?" asked one of the younger members of the party.

"Perfectly correct, although John never said a word about it at the time, and it only got out by accident. Of course it was when Edward was Prince of Wales. The Prince attended a game and was greatly mystified over it. He couldn't understand how our six foot four pitcher managed to twirl the ball with such a decided curve. So he sent word on the quiet to Tener that he would like to see him privately. After the game was over I had been presented to the Prince and his wife, who said he wanted to thank me for the pleasure we had given them. I asked him how he liked the game, and he laughed a little and admitted that it was a pretty good game, but not equal to cricket. Of course I didn't agree with him but it would have been high treason to have said so, and I managed to keep from putting my foot in it. I don't know whether the Prince thought any more of the game after Tener had explained it to him, but I'm mighty certain he didn't convince John that cricket was superior to the American national game.

"After we returned to God's country John played with us for a while and was then purchased by the Pittsburg Nationals, who offered him a bigger salary than I was paying him because they needed him in their business and were anxious to patronize home talent. But he had weakened his arm with so much strenuous twirling and he decided to quit the game.

"After he quit the game Tener settled in Charleroi, a small town near Pittsburg. I believe John was one of the original company that laid out the place. He went into the banking business in a small way and prospered. He had been an enthusiastic member of the Order of Elks for several years, and one of the first things he did at Charleroi was to organize a lodge. It wasn't long before he was one of the most popular men in the order and was made first its grand treasurer and then exalted ruler. I don't mind telling you that his connection with the order didn't prevent his political advance a little bit. Then he got into politics and before he knew it was sent to Congress. Don't you worry about John; he's onto every curve in the political game."

John K. Tener.

What Senator Gorman's Infatuation Cost Him

"Did you know the late Senator Arthur Pue Gorman when he was a ball player of the first rank?" asked one of the group who was something of a baseball historian.

"Only slightly," the Captain answered. "Senator Gorman's connection with the professional game was only of short duration. You know the Senator was page in the United States Senate for fourteen years, beginning when he was thirteen years of age. It was prior to 1870 that he played ball, for about that time he became general superintendent of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, and the following year its president. I was playing with the Athletics of Philadelphia at that time, having only just got into professional life myself. I've never known much about Senator Gorman's career as a player and I've never found anybody who could tell me a great deal. I believe he was with the old Baltimores when they first organized."

"I once heard a little story of an episode of the Senator's early ball career that shows what kind of a man he was in those days," ventured one of the group who had not yet spoken. "If you would like to hear it I will give it to you as I recall it," he added modestly.

"Let her go," said the Captain, and the others signified a similar desire to hear the story.

"It isn't much of a tale," began the narrator, "but it made quite an impression on me when I heard it from the lips of the only person now living who figured in the little affair. It happened just after Gorman has ceased to be a Senate page, which was when he was twenty-seven and had been appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in the Fifth district of Maryland. At that time (it must have been in 1869) baseball was beginning to recover a little from the backset it had sustained during the civil war, and there was nobody in the State of Maryland who was more interested in the game than Arthur Pue Gorman. How greatly engrossed in baseball he had become is apparent from the circumstances I am going to relate.

"There was a very charming young woman in Baltimore, the daughter of one of the leading ministers in the city, who had many admirers, none of them more openly devoted than the young revenue collector. The affair had proceeded so far that, although no promises had been exchanged, both of the young people had made up their minds that it was only a question of time and opportunity. Gorman made no secret of his preference, and it was understood by the friends of both that the matter was practically settled.

"It seems that the young man had promised to call at the rectory on a certain afternoon and take his charmer out for a drive. The appointed hour arrived, but Gorman didn't. The young lady was properly disappointed, but inclined to make the best of it, supposing, of course, that the cause of the broken engagement would be amply sufficient. Two and evening a weary looking and dishevelled young man in the uniform of a ball player made his appearance at the rectory and demanded an audience with the rector's daughter. It was Arthur Pue Gorman come to tell how it all happened.

"When he stood in the presence of his fair inamorata, a crushed and almost hopeless figure in his fear and penitence, he was obliged to confess that he had been sofurried by a sudden summons to fill the place of a deelict that all idea of his engagement had flown his mmory. The young lady declined absolutely to accept the excuse. 'If you had forgotten me for any other reason than baseball,' she declared, 'I might have overlooked it, but I don't care to compete aginst such a powerful rival.'"

The narrato paused and flicked the ashes from his cigar.

"Well, why don't you go on?" asked the captain.

"Why should I? The courtship didn't," he returned simply.

An Undertaker's Assistant Who Made Good.

"Wonder how much longer we're going to be held up?" the Captain used dryly. "Seems to me those fellows ought to be mixed up to concert pitch by this time."

"Are you at the end of your list of baseball men who got into the public eye after quitting the game?" put in the man whomad told the Gorman story.

"Not on your life" returned Pop briskly. "That list's good for half dozen more expatiates. Why, I haven't said a wrd about Senator Morgan G. Bulkeley and Chief Justice Moody, two of the biggest baseball promoters in he business. Some time when I feel just like it I'llell you how Charlie Murphy, the Tammany Chief, arrowly escaped being a professional. And there's Billy Sunday—I guess he's in public life, ain't he? Ince he went into the evangelist business he's mad considerable of a reputation. Probably his fame as a player didn't injure his prospects any when he chaned his trade. Do you know Billy? One of the squarest chaps that ever played the game. He's another discovery of yours truly. I'll never forget the time I sa him first. He was driving an undertaker's wagon on in Marshalltown, and it wasn't on account of his skill in handling the ribbons that my attention was attracted to him. Afterward I saw him at a firemen's tornament, and it was the speed he showed on that occasion that impressed me with his possibilities in the ieeball line. It was my opinion that Sunday would evelop into the fastest man on his feet ever known in the profession. That fellow could run a base like scared deer. I engaged him to play with my team, and the first thirteen times he went to the bat he was stuck out. Some of our folks were inclined to chaff me over my new find, but I hung on to him and encouraged him, believing he would get there in time. Did he, though? As a base runner his judgment was 8times faulty and he was altogether too daring, takingextreme chances because of the tremendous speed hepossessed. He was a good fielder and a strong and accurate thrower, his weak point lying in his batting. Don't mind telling you that the ball Billy threw to a hard one to catch, landing in the hands like a tunk of lead.

"I went to hear him once since he got into the evangelist business. Say, he's ely better at that than he was at the game. You bet it straight from me, gentlemen, that the night I beat him he put up such a powerful argument that I can't wonder he was a success. After the performan was over Mrs. Anson and I went up and spoke to hi. He was so glad to see us that he fairly hugged i both. What! You don't mean to tell me that the gas is really out! About time, I should think."

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The Message of the Hour to the Church and the World.

"The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord. Make strait in the desert a highway for our God. . . The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it. Surely the people are grass" (Isaiah xl. 3-7)

London, October 30.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle to-day addressed an audience of nearly four thousand people from the above text. His hearers were of all classes and very intelligent appearing. He had closest attention. He said in part:

God has messages for those who have hearing ears at each great Dispensational change in earth's affairs. These messages have generally been in the nature of forewarning of coming distress and the reasons therefor. Such a message was given to our first parents when they were expelled from Eden—accursed would be the ground for their sakes. Thorns and thistles it would bring forth unto them. In sweat of face they should eat bread thereof until they should return to the ground, from whence they came. Another great message went forth at the time of the flood; another before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; another at the close of the Jewish Age, when Jesus and his Apostles called attention to the prophecies which foretold the Divine rejection of the nation of Israel for a time and declared that all things written in the Law and the Prophets concerning them would have fulfillment, quoting the prophecy which declared that their house would be left desolate; that they would have neither prophet, nor vision, nor priest, nor ephod for many years, but that eventually God's favor would return to Israel—that he would gather them again and fulfill to them everlastingly the blessings promised both to Abraham and to his descendants—"the sure mercies of David."

A week ago we considered the prophetic message, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God" (Isaiah xl, 1). We noted then that the due time has arrived for the fulfillment to Israel of this comforting message—that as a people the appointed time for the return of favor to them is accomplished because their two-fold disciplines for sin have been fulfilled. Thus our present day is clearly marked and the words of our text following imply that now is the time for a special message to all, in proportion as each may have the hearing ear.

It is the voice of God which calls now through various channels and agencies. It cries not from the "City Babylon the Great." It cries not from the citadel of Christendom; but from the wilderness, from those who are more or less separated; from those who have heard the voice of the Lord saying, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues" (Revelation xviii, 4).

The message of the hour to every hearing ear is, "The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple" (Malachi iii, 1). For centuries you have been praying, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Now your prayer is about to be answered, whether you prayed in sincerity or in hypocrisy. The glory of the Lord is about to be revealed. "All flesh shall see it together." It will not be revealed merely to one nation, nor merely to one holy class. His glory will be revealed in flaming fire—in judgments. All flesh shall see it—the rich and the poor, the learned and the ignorant, the holy and the unholy. But, as the Prophet Malachi declares, "Who shall abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth; for he is like fuller's soap (in its attack upon grease and dirt), and he is like a refiner's fire," as it melts and separates the dross of sin and iniquity (Malachi iii, 2).

The coming of a great earthly king to a city is the signal for a general cleaning up everywhere. And so the Lord declares that the message of his fast-approaching Kingdom should influence all who have the hearing ear to make preparation. To each nation it means Set your house in order. An inspection is at hand. See that your laws are just and equitable and that they are administered justly. The same message comes to each self-governing city, and lastly, and most important of all, this message comes to each individual, and especially to all who have named the name of Christ. Or, as St. Peter declares, this inspection of the King of kings and Lord of lords must begin with the house of God (I. Peter iv. 17). And if the inspection be so searching that it must begin with God's saints, what could we expect of it when it reaches those who are merely nominal Christians and then the world in general! Ah! we may expect just what the Bible advises us will come, "A time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation" (Daniel xii, 1). The message of this hour, dear friends, elsewhere stated in Holy Writ, is, "Seek meekness; seek righteousness. It may be that ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger" (Zephaniah ii. 3).

The greatest Teacher the world has ever known, a Jew, eighteen centuries ago, declared prophetically of our day that every hidden thing shall be revealed (Matthew x. 26). We see his prophecy fulfilling. The secrets of nations are being exposed. Injustice in its every form is being brought to light as never before. Inequity in financial institutions and in politics and in private affairs is being remorselessly muckraked and brought to light. Expediency and policy might say, Hide these things from public gaze. But under Divine Providence the light is being turned on everywhere and hidden things of darkness are being exposed, sometimes in the evil and sometimes in the good. And sometimes, perhaps, the Adversary succeeds in making the good to appear evil. We are merely noting the general tendency—the great fact so peculiar to our day. We are not saying that every charge of fraud is bona-fide.

The great levelling processes mentioned by the Prophet may be seen at work everywhere in society—in politics, in finance, in religion. A straight path is certainly being marked out in the wilderness. The people are coming to see gradually what constitutes Justice from the Divine standpoint—the path that Jehovah God will take when coming to mankind to require an accounting for the blessing of religion and of enlightenments granted to humanity in this, our day. Those who point out to mankind the straight paths do not always walk therein themselves. Nevertheless, the great purpose of the Almighty is being accomplished in the exposures of sin and injustices, whether made from the Christian pulpit or from the socialistic platform or in the public press. The Divine edict is, "Make straight in the desert a highway for your God" (Isaiah xl, 3)—show his path of righteousness; make it known to all the people.

We should remember, however, that it is one thing to know the path of righteousness, of justice and of equity, and another thing to walk therein. Let us, my dear hearers, see to it that we not only recognize the Divine standards of righteousness and that we proclaim these to all who have the hearing ear, but let us also take heed that we practice what we preach; that we be not condemned in respect to those principles which we allow and acknowledge and proclaim as the Golden Rule to others. Alas for the hypocrites who proclaim the way of the Lord to others, yet ignore that way in their own dealings. We have every reason to believe that honesty is one of the qualities which our God most highly appreciates in his creatures; hence we may be sure that hypocrisy is one of the most abominable qualities in his sight. Hearken to the words of the Great Teacher, "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! . . . for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers" (Luke xi, 44-46).

Let all who have named the name of Christ; all who in any sense of the word profess to be God's people, put far from them the hypocrisies which appear so abominable in others. Let us be honest. Let us practice even more than we ever preached. Let all who belong to the Lord be indeed burning and shining lights in the world—examples of justice and righteousness in their homes, in their neighborhoods, in the workshop and in the markets. Let us not only proclaim and assist in making straight before our feet the pathway of our God, but let us conform our words and deeds and thoughts thereto. The general result of the uncovering of the hidden things of darkness, and the bringing of them to light, and the proclamation of the straight way of the Lord, will have a great effect, and that effect is declared by the Prophet. It will mean a Revolution—in symbolical language, an earthquake. Note the picture given: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places smooth." Not in one instant will all this mighty transformation of society be accomplished. Not at once will all the degraded members of the human family be brought to the general standard of level. So at once will the mountains and hills (the kingdoms and princedoms of the world) be brought down to the common level. Not at once will thus a general equalization of society be effected. But it will be effected. "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

"The levelling process already is begun. In Germany, for instance, one-fourth of the Reichstag is composed of Socialists, notwithstanding the fact that the wealthy have several votes to the poor man's one. Already we see the great mountain (or nation) of Russia yielding to the demands of the people and granting them a measure of civil rights. There we see a practical illustration of the lighting up of the valleys and the bringing low of the mountains. In Great Britain we see another wonderful illustration of this principle; for here, more than in any other Kingdom of Europe, perhaps, the distance between the mountain tops of autocracy and the depths of social degradation have been lessened so that in Great Britain, the change demanded by the new Kingdom, Messiah's Kingdom, will be less than in many other countries. Here it has come gradually.

A well-known American authoress (Henry Ward Beecher's sister) once wrote some words which seem prophetic:—

"I can see his coming judgments, as they circle all the earth,
The signs and groanings promised, to precede a second birth;
I read his righteous sentence, in the crumbling thrones of earth—
Our King is marching on.

"The Gentile Times' are closing, for their kings have had their day;
And with them sin and sorrow, will forever pass away;
For the tribe of Judah's Lion, now comes to hold the sway—
Our King is marching on.

"The seventh trump is sounding, and our King knows no defeat,
He will sift out the hearts of men before his judgment-seat.
O! be swift, my soul, to welcome him;
be jubilant, my feet—
Our King is marching on."

F. R. J. Mitchell, 418 George street, or The Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N.Y.

The exposure of the frailties of poor humanity—of the shams of society and of religion and of business and politics, all are constituting a great black background, against which the glories of the Lord are being revealed in striking contrast, as the critics of the world mercilessly hew to the line and law bare the cankers in politics and pollutions of our social system. The effect of this primarily will be the arousing of the masses against the classes of privilege. Their human idols and ideals will crumble. Their confidence in men will melt. They will vent to what they will esteem to be a righteous indignation. And so doing they will forget that the masses are equally as unrighteous, unjust, as the more favored classes, in proportion to their opportunities. Wherein they judge others they should also condemn themselves, and the result should be that mercy which the Lord enjoins.

Only those who forgive others their trespasses—who thus manifest a spirit of love and sympathy—need expect to have mercy, consideration, shown them by the new King. He will surely punish injustice and unrighteousness of word and deed and thought in the poor as in the rich, in the ignorant as in the learned, in the outwardly religious as in the outwardly profane. The message of the hour to Christian, Jew and Gentile is what it was eighteen centuries ago, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand." Repent and reform respecting public injustices, no matter of how long standing, no matter of whom practised and approved. Repent of and reform from and disown the rank errors to be found in so many Church creeds, dishonoring to our Creator. Let us be honest in our professions of faith. Repent as respects wrong practices which have crept into our Churches, quite out of harmony with the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles.

Let us return to the simplicity of the early Church. Let us repent of the God-dishonoring statements we have put forth in the name of Him and religion and the Bible, by which we palmed off bad tidings of great misery, as instead of the true Gospel of Good Tidings of Great Joy which shall be unto all people. Let us repent of and abandon the falsehoods and misrepresentations so common in business life—the subserviency of the Truth to money. Let us repent of and put away the dishonesties of the Stock Exchange, through which the weak and ignorant financial lambs are deceived and impoverished. Let us repent of the iniquities which abound in nearly every home, even those where Christ is claimed to be the Head—injustices of husbands toward wives and of wives toward husbands, the strong-minded toward the weaker-minded—failing to observe the Golden Rule. Let us repent of the injustices practiced by parents upon children, in violation of the same Golden Rule. Let us repent of the dishonor and disobedience to parents practiced by many children. Let us repent of the selfish ambitions of our own hearts and let within me a clean heart, O Lord, and renew a right spirit within me. "Cleanse thou me from secret faults; keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins" (Psalm ii, 10; xix, 12, 13).

True, these and similar exhortations have been made by the Lord's people from time immemorial. And yet the present proclamation is different from all others in that it proclaims, "The time is at hand." "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand!" Not an earthly kingdom with an earthly king; not a papal kingdom exhorting the world to righteousness in the name of the Lord! Not a Protestant ecclesiastical empire exhorting to godliness! But the real Kingdom of God's dear Son so long promised, so long prayed for, is at hand! It will be a Spiritual Empire, replacing and displacing Satan's empire in the world and using as its earthly agency Israel restored to Divine favor. Men will not say, Lo, here, or, lo, there, but Behold, the Kingdom of God will be in the midst of mankind—everywhere present, empowered to bless and empowered to punish. The Great Prince of Light, the King in his glory, with the elect as his Bride on the heavenly, spiritual, invisible plane, will soon take the sceptre of earth. His great power and the glorious majesty of his righteous rule will be manifest in the judgments which will prevail—rewards and punishments. "When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world shall learn righteousness" (Isaiah xxvi, 9).

Thrilling Rescue In Storm.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 1.—The crew of the Norwegian bark Mastorea, 17 in all, were brought here yesterday on the fruiter Juan, from Jamaica. The seamen were rescued during the West Indian hurricane a week ago Sunday by the British bark River Platte, and taken to the island. Their vessel, which was bound from Gulf Port, Miss., to Buenos Ayres, was abandoned in a sinking condition.

The members of the crew of the Mastorea went through a most thrilling experience. Their vessel rapidly filling with water, the wreckage decks a mass of wreckage, the lifeboats disabled and a hurricane wind still hurling mountainous seas over the derelict, the men had all but abandoned hope when the River Platte was sighted. When the latter vessel came near enough the crew of the Mastorea embarked in their damaged lifeboat, which sank to the gunwales and was only kept afloat by the air tanks.

Although the boat put away from the Mastorea at noon it was 6 p.m. before the last man was safely aboard the River Platte.

Incendiary Words Misquoted.

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Albert B. Kreitler, third vice-president of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union of North America, yesterday made the following statement in reference to a despatch sent recently from Denver:

"Through the Associated Press I wish to correct a statement which has been given a wide circulation. Press despatches have quoted me as saying, in a talk with the Trades and Labor Assembly at Denver, that 'the newspaper building would blow up before a settlement would be made with the pressman's union,' leading the public to believe I had been advocating the perpetration of such a dastardly deed.

"A local publisher made the statement to me that he 'would see the building blow up before he would settle with the pressmen's union.' In my talk, I simply quoted the publisher to show his attitude toward the pressmen's union. The incendiary words quoted are those of the publisher, but have been attributed to me."

A Persistent Desperado.

Niagara Falls, Nov. 1.—Francisco Ardino, Italian, aged 47 years, was arrested on Sunday in a fracas in little Italy. Chief Kimmino, who was appealed to for aid, sent Officer Jones to the scene. The bluecoat found Ardino, armed to the teeth, holding at bay a score of his fellow-countrymen. He was arrested with difficulty. When searched, Ardino had in his possession a 38-calibre revolver and an ugly dirk.

In the police court yesterday morning he was found guilty on both charges of carrying a gun and a knife, and a fine of $50 was imposed.

Ardino played the same role about six weeks ago, when he was sentenced to thirty days in Welland jail.

STRIKE IS GROWING

Expressmen In New York Get Big Accessions to Their Ranks.

New York, Nov. 1.—The striking expressmen gained adherents yesterday, when between 1,500 and 1,800 workers of Monahan's Express, the Boston Despatch and the Manhattan Delivery Co. joined them. The platform men of the American Express Co. at the Grand Central Station, and the company's way-bill clerks went out in sympathy. It had previously been reported that the Boston Despatch and the Manhattan Delivery Co. were involved, but the walk-out did not occur until yesterday. More than 10,000 men are now on strake, demanding increased pay and shorter hours.

It was announced at strike headquarters last evening that a conference with Mayor Gaynor had been arranged for to-day, when the representatives of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters will formally protest to the mayor against the employment of the municipal police as guards on the wagons of the express companies. It was said also that a meeting of the executive heads of the local unions had been arranged for to-day, to discuss the advisability of calling a general strike of "everything on wheels in the city," affiliated with the unions, except railroads.

There were many small disturbances in various parts of the city yesterday, when strikers attacked wagons manned by strike-breakers. Stones and other missiles were thrown, and several drivers and their helpers were badly hurt. William Hoyt, a helper on an American Express wagon, had his skull crushed by a brick-bat, and probably will die. All the disturbances were quickly quelled by the police, who dealt in no gentle manner with the strikers. Many arrests were made and heavy fines imposed. Policemen sat with the drivers of the 915 wagons of all companies which made deliveries in the city, and an escort of from one to three mounted patrolmen followed each wagon.

Defaulters Arrested.

Acapulco, Mexico, Nov. 1—From the descriptions given by a detective agency it is believed that two of the men who were arrested on their arrival here on the schooner Kate Saturday are Wilson B. Evans, absconding teller of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles, and H. H. Hamburg, an alleged accomplice. It is said that $11,000 has been recovered.

The Kate came into port to take on a supply of gasoline and three passengers, giving the names of Harry Ham, O. Carlson and Dan Archer, who were taken into custody as suspects, on the theory that they might have been implicated in the dynamiting of The Los Angeles Times' building. The sum of $10,000 was found on the boat.

The captain, Swan Engdethe, and Adolphson, the engineer, were placed under guard. The captain said that he had been engaged to take the schooner from San Francisco to the Galapagos Islands, off the coast of Peru. He was to be paid $730.

Villagers Fought Flames.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 1.—After fighting flames from midnight until long after dawn, the tired residents of Boswell, a mining town in Somerset County, looked out, Saturday, upon a scene of desolation. Property to the value of $75,000 had been destroyed. The hotel, business houses and seven dwelling were burned.

The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 1400 cattle, 2250 sheep and lambs, 700 hogs and 250 calves.

A feature of the trade was the stronger feeling in the market for cattle and prices show an advance of fully ½c per lb., as compared with those realized last Wednesday. In sheep the feeling was firm, but prices show no change, all the offerings being cleaned up at 3¾c to 4c per lb. Calves were scarce, for which the demand was good, and prices ruled firm at 5½c to 6c per lb., live weight.

1910—Willie Edwards, Keene, Time 29 mins.

History repeated itself in the Examiner road races yesterday. Albert S. Smoke, the young Chemong Mississagua Indian, who started as a dark horse in last year's senior race and surprised the talent by galloping home an easy winner, ran true to form in yesterday's big event and duplicated his performance by romping down George street to the finishing line a half a mile ahead of the second man, this year, as last, Charlie Thorpe, of the Victoria Harriers. In the junior race, Willie Edwards, the lanky Keene youth, who won last year, proved that his victory then was not a fluke, by cleaning up the biggest junior field in the history of the event.

There was nothing to the senior race but Smoke. The Indian boy, on roads that were ankle deep in mud as a result of last week's snow, making the going slippery and treacherous, ran away from his field and clipped three-fifths of a second off Ernie Wilson's record. The more on considers this feat, the more wonderful it must appear. Remember, Wilson made his remarkable mark under ideal weather conditions and was pressed every foot of the way by Ben Howard, the Hiawatha Indian. Smoke was in a class by himself and ran through seas of mud and yet finished in 55 minutes, 15 2-5 seconds, a truly phenomenal performance. After the first few miles, Smoke had no opposition to force him to extend himself; yet he breaks the record. He finished, too, in a manner that seemed to indicate that he had a few more miles left in him. His victory was easier than last year. Thorpe who followed him home, was not in as good shape as in 1909, and none of the rest of the field threatened to give the Chemong speed merchant a battle. Smoke was simply head and shoulders above his field and won as he pleased. If he is taken care of, Jimmy George, the Beaverton Indian, had better look after his laurels in the next Hamilton Herald race, for it looks from here as if the Chemong boy would cut one big swath on that around the bay course. Nine started in the senior race and seven ploughed or galloped, as the case might be, through the mile of mud to the Examiner office.

As was the race with the seniors, so it was with the juniors. Edwards had a battle every inch of the way, finally winning after a seventy-five yard sprint at the finish by a yard from Garnet Tovey. This year Edwards went away from his field and won by himself. He was half way back to the Y.M.C.A. to dress before the second man, Frank Leahy, of Douro, came into sight, while behind was a procession of runners of all sizes and ages, stretched out for a mile. Edwards easily had the speed of the large field and his victory was clean cut and decisive, there being little doubt of the result after the first half mile.

The weather conditions could not have been improved upon. It was bright and sunshiny, a typical autumn day. The only drawback was the bad footing, which, however, did not seem to affect either junior or senior winner very much. Although there were no close finishes, as in some other years, the big fields and the remarkable performance of both senior and junior winners, make the Examiner races of 1910 the most notable in their history.

There was none of the usual confusion at the finishing point by the crowd blocking the road. While there were as many or more spectators than ever, the crowd was handled splendidly. Ropes had been strung on each side of the street as far as Brock street, and Chief of Police Thompson and Officers Newhall and McGarry kept the course clear. No vehicles were allowed to come below Brock street, and the street cars were stopped during the finishes, with the result that the runners had an uninterrupted road to the tape. The result was much more satisfactory, both from the contestants' and from the spectators' standpoint.

A feature of the two races was the showing made by outside-town runners who carried off five out of the eight prizes. Smoke the senior winner, hails from Chemong, and Ernie Coons, the fourth man, from Young's Point. In the junior race, Edwards, the winner, hangs up his hat in a Keene hall-way. Leahy, the second prize winner, confesses to Douro as his home, and Holnbeck, third to finish, is an import from Cobourg. Cecil Armstrong was the only Peterborough boy to finish in the first five, as J. B. Mann, the fifth runner, is a Bridgenorth boy.

The Senior Race.

Although there was no close and exciting finish, the senior race is an outstanding one, inasmuch as the previous record held by Ernie Wilson for the Examiner road race, of 55 mins. 16 secs., was broken by three-fifths of a second, Smoke's time yesterday being 55 mins. 15 2-5 secs. For the second year in succession Smoke, who was under the colours of the Chemong A. C., is the holder of the Cup and also the winner of a handsome gold watch. This is the first time in which the event has been won twice by the same runner. There was never a doubt as to who would win the race, Smoke's time last year was 56 mins 8 3-5 secs. Charlie Thorpe, who was second last year, ran second to Smoke again this Thanksgiving. He had no hope of winning the race, as the Indian kept too big a lead on him all through. Of the eleven entries there were two scratches, Chas. Knapp and John Campbell, who failed to face starter C. G. Graham, who lined the other nine up at the ten mile post in Lakefield and started them off at exactly 10:30 Smoke loafed behind the bunch at the start, evidently wanting a chance to look over the field. He was almost last to leave Lakefield, Morris Montgomery, the light-haired English boy was the first to show in front at the start and he cut loose with a merry pace that shook up the field behind him some. It was too fa for the distance and finally near the three mile post Montgomery's ankle gave out and he had to quit.
